HOLMGREN HAS A VISION

Sees Success with New 'Standard of Excellence'

by Lee Remmel, Editorial Director

The 1992 National Football League season, once seemingly remote, was drawing near for towering Mike Holmgren.

On this idyllic and cloudless day in early June, the kind immortalized in verse by James Russell Lowell, Holmgren was still mentally pinching himself.

An acknowledged traditionalist and history buff, he confided, "I looked up at the stadium today from the practice field (during a third and final mini-camp) and saw 'GREEN BAY PACKERS' on Lambeau Field...saw that big sign...and I told a visiting coach, 'I can't even believe it sometimes. I look up there and here I am...' "

"Here" indeed—as the eleventh head coach in Green Bay's distinguished pro football history, with the task of returning the Packers to their once accustomed position among the NFL's elite, a status they most recently enjoyed in 1972.

A major challenge, to be sure, for any coach, no matter how experienced, but most certainly for a first year head coach, the role in which Holmgren finds himself after leaving the security of an offensive coordinator's berth with the perennially successful San Francisco 49ers.

Few of his predecessors, however, could have had a clearer vision of the task at hand—and the ways and means to accomplish it—than the former USC quarterback, who succeeded Lindy Infante as Green Bay's field leader on January 11.

And, with all due respect to those who have gone before, few who have assumed that imposing responsibility have had a more specific agenda than the 44-year-old Holmgren, who has outlined his "game plan" in impressive detail, months before the opening kick-off of the Packers' 1992 season.

He has, for example, listed as his top priority—in taking over a team that was 4-and-12 in 1991 following a 6-and-10 record in 1990, the need "to establish a winning attitude...We have to establish the fact that good things are going to happen in the second half of games, not bad things...And that's a mindset.

"Then, if we continue adding players to get a little stronger, a little more depth, maybe a game-breaker here or there, then we can really compete."

Holmgren, a former high school history and economics teacher, describes the "winning attitude" he is seeking as "a belief in themselves—a belief that if you go into a game, you're going to win it...and you hang in there long enough, good things are going to happen...instead of going in and saying, 'Well, what could happen next?'

"And that is the difference in winning and losing a half a dozen games a year."

From a practical, less abstract perspective, Holmgren has delineated

Official Portrait:

three other objectives that must be accomplished in order for the Green and Gold to be successful.

✔ "We have to upgrade the personnel.

✔ "We have to increase team speed...You cannot win in this league unless you have excellent team speed. The players are too fast.

✔ "And we have to set a standard of excellence...A team gets down on its luck, and soon the players start to believe that's the acceptable level of play."

As he looked to his baptismal season as an NFL head coach, Holmgren evinced no concern over the development of a "winning attitude."

"They're doing everything I'm asking 'em to do, the team," he said. "So that part of the attitude is good. The second part—and maybe more important—is a winning feeling, a mindset, that whether you call it 'attitude'—I don't know exactly what you call it—but the mindset that good things are going to happen...And that has to come. That comes with success—that comes with winning some games and it's a kind of a contagious thing.

"Now the next thing the players have to see is to believe that we can win under the system." On this subject, Holmgren outlined the major changes he is implementing—on both sides of the football. "Our offense starts with a two-back, one-tight end, two-wide receiver base offensive attack," he said. "And while there were two backs in the game often with the last offense, often times that (second) back was split out wide, almost like a wide receiver.

"Our emphasis will be on the quarterback delivering the ball quickly to somebody. The other offense had the quarterback reading, as the receivers were reading, and it would take a little longer to deliver the ball. But a very effective offense...But it's my hope that the quarterback won't get hit as much. The decision-making, once the quarterbacks feel comfortable with it, is a little faster."

There will be more emphasis on the running game, Holmgren also noted. "I think we were probably 55 pass, 45 run in San Francisco, and that ratio should probably continue. Those are percentages in a game. I think we broke it down and we ran the ball more than they did here."

On defense, the new Packer approach will be what Holmgren categorizes as an "attacking" style.

"When you describe a defense, you can describe it as a 'bend-but-not-break' defense, which means that playing that kind of defense, you're reacting most often to what the offense is doing, whereas, most often our defense will be forcing the offense to react to what we're doing," he pointed out. "There will be more blitzing, more man-on-man coverage...It's a little more of a gambling style."

An animated Holmgren gets point across to rookie tackle Andrew Oberg of North Carolina during a mini-camp practice.

In addressing another key issue, the upgrading of personnel, Holmgren conceded, "The draft certainly is the most obvious way, and I believe, how teams really build and win championships. But there are other avenues that are open to us now, Plan B, for example, and that could change in the upcoming years. We also don't know what the status of the draft is or will be...But I think we've helped ourselves this year, through Plan B."

And through the draft?

"I feel good about the players we drafted," the Packer coach affirmed. "Just exactly how that's going to fall now, time will tell...But Terrell Buckley certainly is a potential star."

In the process, there also has been improvement in a second area of concern—a desired increase in team speed, Holmgren said. "That was one of our goals and I think we're a little quicker in the secondary...I think, in our linebacker crew, we've added some speed to that area...We've added some speed at wide receiver. But that'll be an ongoing process and one of the philosophies, again, we came up with."

His six-year experience with the 49ers has been a major factor in helping him arrive at his "standard of excellence," Holmgren said.

"I've told the team that I'm not going to talk to them a great deal about the 49ers, but that was my model, that's been my experience. We did either win the Super Bowl or were in contention for the Super Bowl in all my years there. So I think I kind of look to some of those models as a standard of excellence ...what I'm shooting for.

"I saw, I believe, how a particular player has to practice to get the most out of his position. I saw how I felt a player had to prepare himself off the field in the classroom to get the most out of his ability. And so, after evaluating that, then I just set a standard in my own mind as to how I wanted each position to play. And a lot of it has had to do with the model that I've come from."

Confirming that he has specific models in mind, based on that experience, Holmgren continued, "I think I could probably point to five or six players—by position—that to me, have had—as I've watched them perform, in my own mind, I said of them, 'That is what it takes to win a championship.'

"As a wide receiver, I'll always refer to Jerry Rice...As a quarterback, Joe Montana, as a running back Roger Craig...as a defensive back, Ronnie Lott. Those men I mentioned were the consummate professionals in my opinion. The fact that they worked so hard. They were the quote-unquote stars of that team, yet they also were the hardest workers. And if you can get that combination together, of ability—God-given ability, in most cases, but also a willingness to be coached...and then that work ethic...You can't lose...you can't lose. That's what it takes."

How long a process has it been, developing his "vision" for the Packers in 1992 and beyond?

"I think it's taken me the whole time I've been here to formulate the philosophies and the direction...because I knew there were a couple things that we had to do—before I even got here—and I knew I wanted to do in setting a direction for the team.

"But the other philosophies were based on evaluating the type of personnel we have, and where I think we have to build, and what were the strengths of the team, and so on.

"So it's taken the whole time, and I'll continue to, I'm sure, formulate ideas on putting the team in the right direction."

As might be expected of one who has taken such a comprehensive approach to his responsibilities, Holmgren acknowledged he also had employed a specific agenda in selecting his coaching staff.

"I've been compiling a list of coaches for the last few years—that, if given the chance, these are the guys I wanted to work with," he explained. "And I knew that I was going to try and hire Sherm Lewis and Ray Rhodes (fellow members of the 49ers staff), if at all possible.

"It was important that I get an experienced offensive line coach—who had experience in the NFL—and I was able to do that with Tom Lovat, who is an excellent coach.

"After that, it was important that I get good communicators and good teachers—good football coaches that I knew could communicate to this player...today's player...because I think the game has changed just a little bit. And I think coaching philosophies have changed...Certainly, the money has changed...And it really doesn't matter how much we know; it matters what you can communicate and what they can then perform—and how you can get the player to perform.

"Then I was fortunate in being able to hire Greg Blache and Dick Jauron off the former staff.

"I think I have a good blend. I wanted a blend of maturity and the wildness and unpredictability of youth, and I got that," Holmgren said, the trace of a twinkle in the eye, "with Steve Mariucci and Andy Reid...Nolan Cromwell. Those guys are young—they're very experienced, but compared to some of the rest of us, they're a little bit younger."

Happy with the results of his coaching quest, Holmgren declared, "I'm tickled...We have a good staff—I know I have a good staff. I just have to kind of direct 'em. I know they're going to work hard—I know they're going to teach. I don't have to be concerned that something isn't getting covered, because it'll get covered."

Holmgren admitted that the matter of a winning background—an association with success—had been a key consideration in hiring Lewis and Rhodes as the coordinators.

"I think, in getting the offensive and defensive coordinators—it's not always possible—but to be able to hire people that have been there, have won Super Bowls, that have those rings on their fingers, that know what it takes, that have the same standard I have—it makes it a little easier right in the beginning, certainly."

Asked if General Manager Ron Wolf—the man who five months earlier had named him head coach—had been a factor in helping him forge his agenda, Holmgren replied, "I think Ron and I will work on many things together. But then I think it's also important that we are able to discuss different points of view with one another...and that's healthy. We both encourage that.

"As far as the football team, he came from a system that was probably in the nature of the type of player that they had, different from the system I was accustomed to. So I would say it's probably going to be a blend of the two systems. But Ron is very, very good. His main thrust is personnel. And he doesn't want to coach the football team. And my main thrust is coaching the football team.

"I think it's important that we both have our own agendas."

Enthusiastic about the relationship he and Wolf have developed in just six months—one that bodes well for the organization's artistic future—Holmgren said, "It's been great. The thing is, I believe we're very comfortable talking with one another about anything. Also knowing that. . .both of us. . .our goals are exactly the same—to bring a championship to the Packers. . .Neither one of us feels threatened by the other...I couldn't be in a better situation as far as having my boss be Ron.

"We can talk about just about anything, from our kids to baseball, to football...But when it comes down to business, like I said, I don't think there's any sacred ground. We can throw anything onto the table and discuss it...That's why it's a very healthy situation, I think, from a coach's standpoint."

Although obviously well prepared for his head coaching role, Holmgren readily acknowledges, "I think we're all human...I think it's a little dangerous when a coach starts thinking he's got all the answers, you know. Then you kind of shut out other people's input, and other ideas, and I'll never do that, because I'm going to rely on my guys a lot. But I will make mistakes...but each year I hope to make fewer mistakes and that's how we're going to have a chance to win this thing."

He has been in Green Bay for just a few short months but Holmgren already is familiar with the Packers' rich tradition, including an NFL record eleven championships.

"The Packers' tradition is important to me," he said. "I am as much a football fan—I always have been—as I am a coach. And, certainly, when I was growing up, the Packers were the team, and during my high school years and a little bit after that."

Holmgren is also aware that, despite all of those championships, the Packers have had only two winning head coaches among the ten that have preceded him—team founder E. L. "Curly" Lambeau and Vince Lombardi. But he is not inclined to lose any sleep over the knowledge, or what this might presumably suggest.

"It doesn't bother me and it doesn't affect my thinking," he said. "I've thought a lot about that and I've tried to figure out why that's happened. I don't think I've come up with any concrete or good answers, so I'm just kind of letting it go...And we're starting fresh."

With, he made it clear, quiet and unwavering confidence.

"We," Holmgren assured, "are going to succeed."

A Meeting of the Minds—practice field conversations between Holmgren and general manager Ron Wolf are a common, almost daily, occurrence.

RON WOLF LIKES CHALLENGES...AND TRADITIONS

by Sharon Raboin
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Wolf, regarded as one of pro football's most astute judges of talent, takes a close look at Packer newcomers during a mini-camp practice.

Ron Wolf was advised not to accept the position of executive vice president and general manager of the Green Bay Packers.

Too difficult to succeed, said some. Terrible weather, said others.

But Bob Harlan, Packers president, told Wolf what he wanted to hear. Wolf would receive full control of football operations—a power that had never been granted in the 73-year history of the franchise, although Vince Lombardi often acted without consulting the executive committee.

"I had the opportunity to come here, and try to put it back where it belonged," said Wolf, who brought 29 years of experience in the National Football League to the Packers. "It was too good of an opportunity to turn down."

The authority to oversee all aspects of the football operation was not part of the package when the Packers sought to fill the newly created position of vice president of football operations in 1987. Troubled at the lack of control, Wolf withdrew his name from consideration. The Packers hired Tom Braatz from the Atlanta Falcons instead.

But Harlan kept Wolf, a respected football man, in the back of his mind. Five years and almost 50 losses later, Harlan felt a major restructuring of the franchise was in order. Harlan called Wolf on Nov. 20, 1991, the same day that he informed Braatz that the Packers were moving in another direction.

What had bothered Wolf in the past was no longer a stumbling block. Wolf realized that he had the power to control his destiny. The weather wasn't a concern.

He likes challenges. He likes traditions. At 1265 Lombardi Avenue, both were present.

So, against the advice of some of his friends and colleagues, the 53-year-old Wolf accepted on Nov. 27 the tremendous task of resurrecting the Packers.

"It's a dream come true to join the Green Bay Packers," Wolf said. "I have always regarded the Packers organization as one of the finest in the National Football League. I want to assure all Packers fans that I will be doing everything in my power to make this football team a consistent contender and NFL champion once again."

The Packers have reached the playoffs twice in the 25 years since Lombardi led the team to their third straight championship in 1967. The winning percentage of the succeeding coaches has steadily declined. The Packers have had a losing record in five of the last six seasons.

The Packers face a long, difficult road. But Wolf is undaunted. His objective: "You want to be a part of the ultimate game, on the ultimate field, on that ultimate date."

Wolf, of course, is talking about the Super Bowl.

Is that possible?

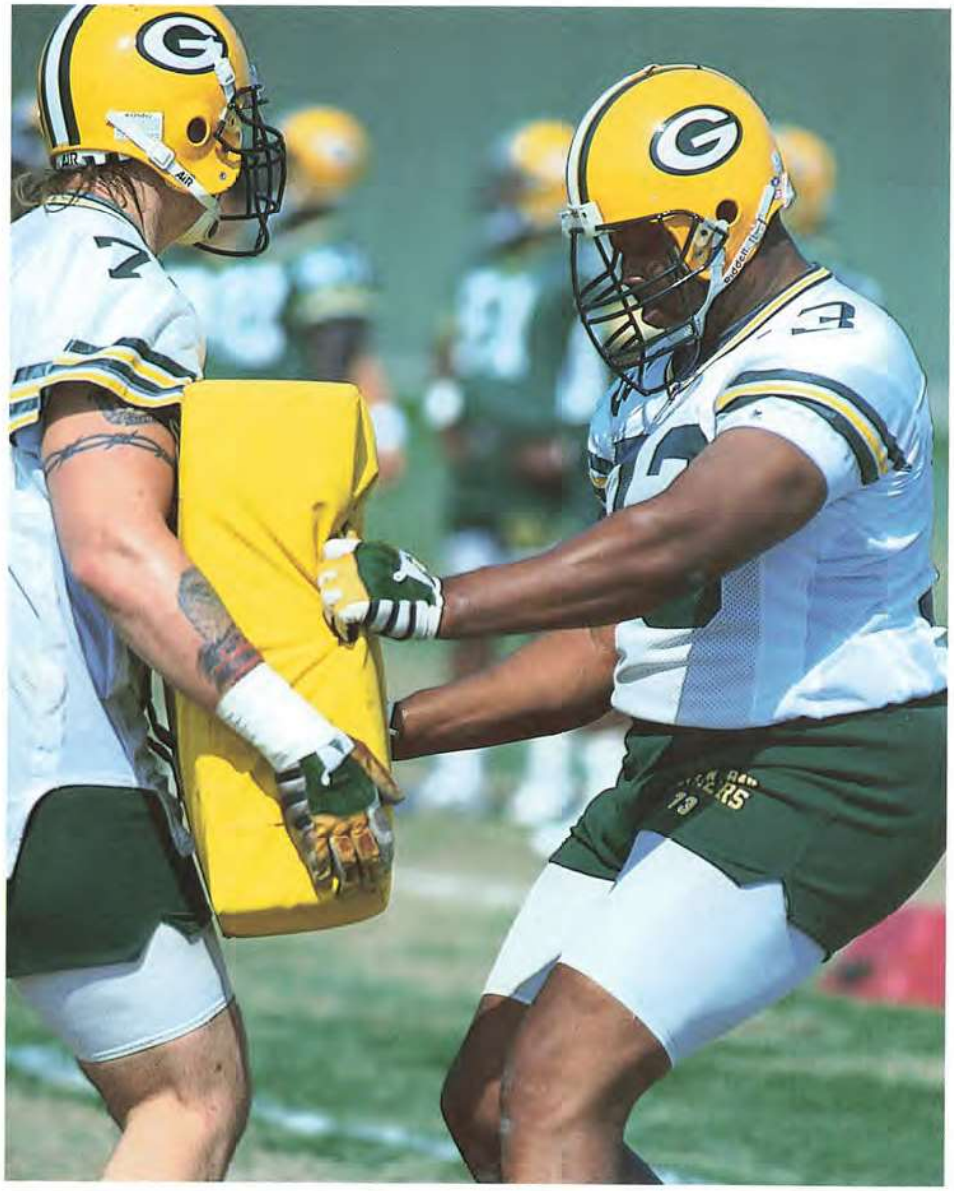
"I don't think there are any real doubts that it can happen," Wolf said. "It's just when it's going to happen. We realize that we're on the bottom of the totem pole. We're going to be taken advantage of. We're not going to get the calls that the good teams will get. But we'll persevere and we'll endure, and, ultimately, we'll have a winner."

Can Wolf find success where so many others before him have failed?

A number of executives in the National Football League believe that Wolf possesses the knowledge and experience to turn the franchise around.

- Al LoCasale, executive assistant with the Los Angeles Raiders, where Wolf spent most of his career: "If it can be done, Ron's the right choice. He's a very knowledgeable football person and an outstanding judge of talent. He has a near photographic memory."

Ron Wolf is officially welcomed by Packer President Bob Harlan as he takes over as organization's Executive Vice President and General Manager on November 20, 1991.



Wolf's acquisition of offensive tackle Tootie Robbins from the Phoenix Cardinals in the off season paves the way for moving Mandarich to right guard.

Running back Greg Bell, a three-time 1,000-yard rusher, was plucked from the free agent ranks by Wolf in a bid to upgrade the Packers' ground game.

- Ken Herock, vice-president of player personnel, Atlanta Falcons: "He's the best at what he does. He has the eye for players."
- Bruce Coslet, New York Jets coach: "He's a top-flight personnel guy and that is the lifeblood of any pro football team."
- Hugh Culverhouse, Tampa Bay Buccaneers owner: "I hold Ron Wolf in high esteem and regard. He's a terrific person and he's brilliant at evaluating personnel."

Wolf began his career in the National Football League as a scout with the Oakland Raiders in 1963. It was the start of a 25-year relationship with Raiders' owner Al Davis, the man Wolf credits with influencing him the most in football.

Wolf rose quickly. In his mid-30's, he was hired as vice president of operations with the newly-franchised Tampa Bay Buccaneers in 1976. He helped lay the foundation for the Buccaneers, who would reach the playoffs in just four years of existence. He was instrumental in the selection of Pro Bowl defensive end Lee Roy Selmon.

Wolf returned to the Raiders in 1978, where he remained until accepting a position as director of player personnel with the New York Jets in 1990.

It is a football-obsessed lifestyle that Wolf leads. Football is more than a job to Wolf; it is a way of life. Wolf spends long hours at the office. He has no interest in golf or other hobbies. If he isn't spending time with his wife, Edie, and their two children, Jonathan, 10, and Eliot, 9, Wolf can be found reading and studying the history of the game.

Wolf is bright and energetic with a dry sense of humor. He is intense, focused and thorough, qualities which have helped him attain success.

"You can tell, in my mind, that he has been successful," Harlan said. "He has a definite plan, a definite approach to everything he does."

Wolf has moved quickly and decisively to rebuild the once-proud franchise.

In his first six months, Wolf has made sweeping changes in scouting, coaching and player personnel.

Wolf reorganized the scouting department. Wolf fired coach Lindy Infante, one day after the Packers completed the regular season with a 4-12 record. Twenty days later, Wolf hired Mike Holmgren, offensive coordinator of the San Francisco 49ers and one of the hottest coaching prospects in the National Football League. At least five other teams expressed interest in Holmgren. In his three years as coordinator, the 49ers ranked no lower than third in total offense.

Wolf said the 4-12 record was indicative of a lack of talent and athleticism.

He said the Packers needed to adopt a tougher, more aggressive attitude. Those concerns were addressed in the draft. The Packers selected Florida State cornerback Terrell Buckley in the first round and Penn State linebacker Mark D'Onofrio in the second. Both players are rugged and full of confidence.

Wolf has been aggressive in upgrading the talent. He acquired strong-armed quarterback Brett Favre and veteran right tackle Tootie Robbins in trades. He signed a former 1,000-yard rusher in Greg Bell and a Super Bowl cornerback in Lewis Billups. The Packers signed 10 players in Plan B, improving the competition at several positions, in particular wide receiver and the defensive backfield.

There have been a number of changes. But Wolf realizes success might not be immediate.

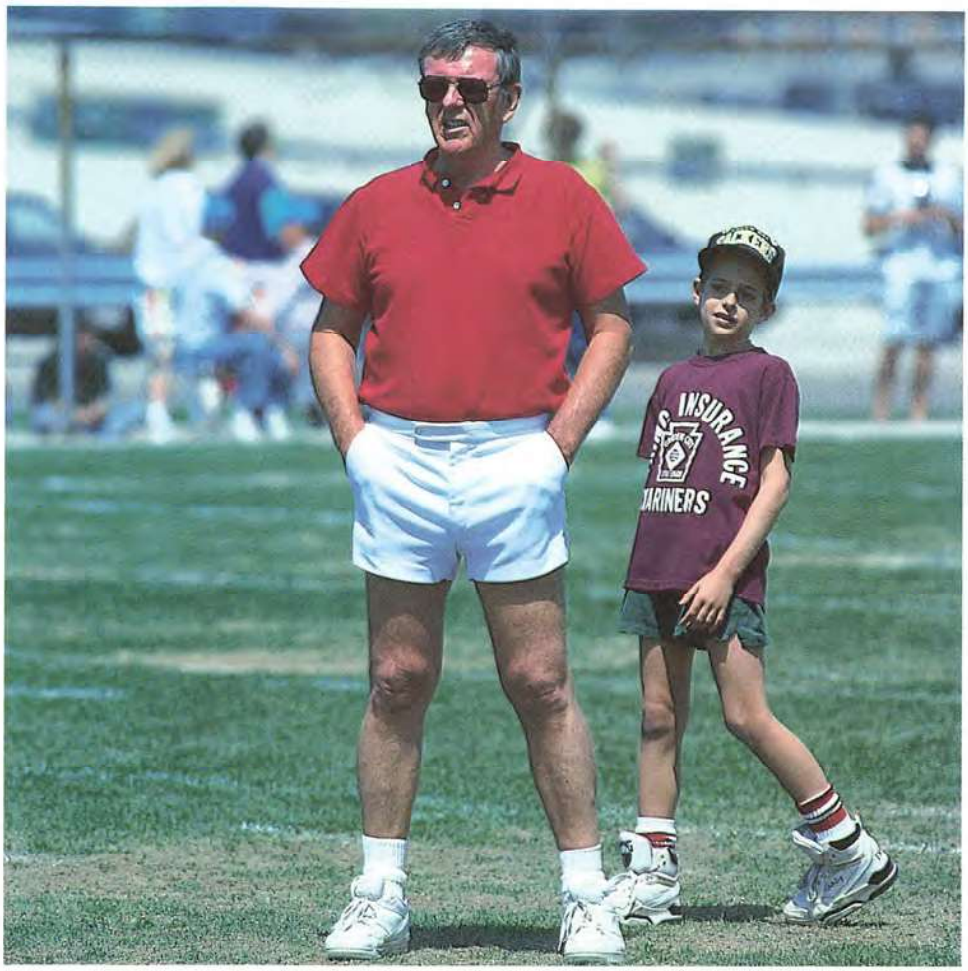
"It's frustrating because you'd always like to do more than you can do," Wolf said. "You just can't do it all. You have to sit, and realize it will take a while to get where you want to be. The old adage—you have to crawl before you can walk..."

Through the draft and Plan B, the Packers have exhausted the most effective means of improving talent. Left are the waiver wire and the World League of American Football, where significant help is possible, but not probable.

Wolf is confident that the Packers will be an exciting team to watch this season. He said Holmgren and his assistants will adapt and adjust to the players at their disposal.

"I would hope that it would be a tough, hard-nosed, aggressive football team on both sides of the ball," Wolf said. "You'll see an offense that's going to control the ball. That's going to gain a lot of yardage. I think it'll be an aggressive, gambling-style of defense."

An almost daily visitor to Packer practice, Wolf watches a workout with Mike Reinfeldt, Packer chief financial officer.



Budding Talent Scout?—Eliot Wolf, also fascinated by football, joins his father in studying the practice field scene.

THE HOLMGREN DECISION

A FAMILY AFFAIR

by Chris Havel
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Mike Holmgren knew he'd be a head coach in the National Football League in 1992. At least a half dozen general managers told him so.

The question was, "Where?"

After sifting through the offers, the San Francisco 49ers offensive coordinator's decision came down to this:

Green Bay or Indianapolis?

Holmgren made the decision the same way he's made countless others.

"We talked about it as a family," says Jenny, the more outspoken of Mike Holmgren's 18-year-old twin daughters.

"Everyone had their say. We all got to offer our opinions."

In the end the Holmgrens: Mike and wife, Kathy; twins Jenny and Calla; Emily, 15; and Gretchen, 10; decided that Green Bay was right for them.

To hear their reasoning suggests that they're right for Green Bay.

They love games played outdoors and on natural grass (see Lambeau Field and County Stadium).

They love to cheer for their team, the louder the better (see any typical Packers fan).

They love an old-fashioned rivalry (see the Chicago Bears).

Of course, they love to win.

"Indianapolis has a good quarterback (Jeff George) and they had some high draft picks," Jenny says. "But the Packers had good picks, too. And (GM) Ron Wolf made a good impression on my dad. He's a smart, classy guy. I think the Packers are going to turn it around. I'm sure of it."

The fact that the Packers are publicly owned didn't go unnoticed.

"No owner to screw things up," says Jenny.

Yet, it was this observation by Kathy that perhaps struck the deepest chord.

"In Green Bay, everyone goes to the games," she reminded her girls. "Win or lose. Warm or cold."

Jenny admits, "That turned us. Mom was right. In Green Bay, the games are outdoors and everyone's all fired up. Compare that to sitting in the Hoosier Dome with 20,000 other people.

"Well, there is no comparison."

Clearly, they are not merely a football coach's wife and his daughters. They are fans in the purest sense.

They preferred Candlestick Park's upper deck to the luxury boxes.

"People got more into it," Calla says. "Sometimes if you sat in the box and shouted, the financial people's families would look at you weird."

Besides, it seemed that the 49ers would lose every time the Holmgrens ventured into the box.

"They were calling us 'The Jinx Family'," Calla says. "Mom wasn't so sure if she even wanted to sit there."

Whatever the vantage point, this is certain: They love to watch football.

Calla and Jenny talk intelligently about zone coverages. They'll spend weekends flipping the TV channels, going from game to game.

"We watch football all the time, even the World League," Calla says. "When we don't know about play calling, we ask dad. He loves to explain it."

Emily gets worked up at the mention of a penalty that contributed to a 49ers' loss last season.

"Lining up in the neutral zone," she says with a huff. "I'd never even heard of that one before."

Gretchen, who is "way advanced" according to Calla, knows that an injury timeout in the final two minutes is charged to the team.

The precocious 10-year-old also has a great sense of the news media.

"Mom, who was that reporter in San Francisco that we didn't like?" she asks in the middle of an interview with a Press-Gazette reporter.

Kathy manages a thin smile and a silent "shush!" to Gretchen, who seems to delight in the situation.

There was also the time sports writers were criticizing Holmgren for calling too many sweeps in a game.

That evening, Holmgren tucked in his youngest daughter, gave her a smooch on the cheek and whispered sweetly, "Goodnight, honey."

To which Gretchen wryly replied, "Goodnight, Sweeper!"

Then there's Kathy, whom Mike says, "Has the stable job in the family.

"She helps me keep it all in perspective," he says.

When the 49ers would lose, Mike might come home and say, "I don't want to talk about it."

Kathy's response: "That's too bad. We talk about everything in this household. Let's have it."

Says Holmgren with a prideful smile: "She's a real pistol."

It's clear that, next to football, Holmgren prefers to talk about the women in his life more than anything.

Holmgren on his daughters:

Calla, 18: "Calla is probably a little more like her mom. Goal oriented and really hard on herself. A perfectionist.

"At times I tell her, no one could be as perfect as you want to be. Just enjoy it a little bit more."

Jenny, 18: "Jenny is my poet. She's a singer. She has a beautiful voice. She loves to write. She's an English major. She gets mad at me because I say she dresses funny. She's a free spirit.

"She does well at school but she never worries about it."

Emily, 15: "Emily, I think, could get through life with her smile. What I like most about her, among a lot of things, is that she's a very compassionate kid. She really cares about how people feel.

"That's a trait we've tried to instill in all of our kids."

Gretchen, 10: "Gretchen, she might be my jock. She's a whirling dervish. Just a bundle of energy.

"She's never known the days when we were living out of apartments. That isn't part of her program."

And Kathy?

"Kathy's a very talented woman. Probably wanted to be a medical missionary. If she had her druthers, it wouldn't be a football coach's wife.

"I think she's a little uncomfortable with some of the hoopla surrounding a person in this position.

"She's a special lady."

One of five, if you ask Holmgren.

"They are a tremendous support system," he says.

Holmgren is asked if his family truly understands where the Packers are in the NFL's pecking order. And that it might take some time to get back to the top of it.

"I don't think so," he says. "They're used to winning. They went to every game in San Francisco positive we were going to win. If we didn't, it was a major upset.

"But they're smart, those kids," he says with a grin. "They'll figure it out pretty quick."

Then he pauses.

"Who knows?" he says. "Maybe we will win every game."

PERSEVERANCE PAYS OFF FOR LEWIS AND RHODES

by Tom Mulhern
The Milwaukee Sentinel

Ray Rhodes is taking part in a rather rare interview, talking freely about any number of topics, when the conversation switches to an uncomfortable subject–Ray Rhodes.

Getting Rhodes to talk at all is an achievement in itself. Getting the Green Bay Packers' new defensive coordinator to talk about himself is next to impossible.

"People will tell you," Rhodes confesses, "I'm not really a big media guy."

Perhaps that is one reason Rhodes, 41, spent 11 years as a somewhat overlooked assistant, coaching defensive backs with the San Francisco 49ers. Rhodes was famous among the San Francisco media for not granting interviews.

It's not that he isn't articulate or doesn't have anything worthwhile to say. Rhodes just doesn't believe in self-promotion.

"I'm not one of those guys that's going to be easy to talk to," he says. "I don't beat my own drum."

There seem to be, however, plenty of people who are eager to beat it for him.

Like former 49ers' safety Ronnie Lott, who has observed: "Ray Rhodes has scouted out, coached and turned out more All-Pros than any other assistant coach on this team (49ers). I don't think he gets what he deserves."

Sherman Lewis, Offensive coordinator

The same might also be said of Sherman Lewis, the Packers' new offensive coordinator and another longtime 49ers' assistant.

Lewis, 49, spent nine seasons with San Francisco, six as running backs coach and three as wide receivers coach, waiting for the chance to become a coordinator.

Unlike Rhodes, Lewis is more outgoing toward the media, highly accessible and frequently quoted.

Unfortunately for Lewis, with so much credit being heaped upon so many people for the 49ers' offensive success—Bill Walsh, Joe Montana, Jerry Rice, Mike Holmgren, et. al—there seemed to be little left for Lewis.

But if Rhodes and Lewis learned anything in waiting for this chance to finally come, it was perseverance.

"One of the things about the profession, you never know when the opportunity will present itself to you," Rhodes says. "You just have to be patient and at some point you'll get your due."

Of course, that doesn't always make it easy.

Before going to the 49ers, Lewis spent 14 years as an assistant coach at

Ray Rhodes, Defensive coordinator

Michigan State, applying for any number of jobs.

"There were times I wondered, yeah," Lewis admits. "I applied for a lot of head coaching jobs in college and never got interviewed for any of them. I was starting to question whether it would ever happen.

"It's a matter of somebody has to get a job and give you a break. Somebody that respects you."

That somebody turned out to be Holmgren, the Packers' new head coach.

The three of them, Holmgren, Lewis and Rhodes, used to sit around and talk about the future when they were with the 49ers. They were all young, with bright futures and aspirations of being head coaches in the NFL. Some of the talk was whimsical, some of it serious.

"You're always saying, You get the head job, remember your old buddy,'" Holmgren says with a smile.

The contributions of Rhodes and Lewis toward the 49ers' success may have gone unappreciated by some people, but not by Holmgren.

When Holmgren was first hired as quarterbacks coach of the 49ers, he spent long hours with Lewis and offensive line coach Bobb McKittrick learning the offense.

"When I first came to the 49ers, Sherm did much of the interview," Holmgren says. "I talked with Coach Walsh, then he turned me over to Sherm and Bobb McKittrick. Sherm was running backs coach at the time, so that was my first experience (with him).

"He's very personable and easy to get along with. He's got a great personality. Then, the more I got to know him and work with him, I realized what an outstanding football coach he is. Ray's the same way. I would say we hit it right off as assistant coaches on that staff."

From the first day Holmgren was hired to coach the Packers, he knew who he wanted to be his coordinators. He was desperately hoping to get at least one of the two. He was slightly delirious to land both.

"I thought maybe I had a chance to get one of the two," Holmgren says. "I thought there was a chance I might not get either one. When I was able to sign both of them, it kind of set the tone for the whole staff."

Just how vital was it for Holmgren to get both Rhodes and Lewis? Without Lewis, Holmgren was prepared to act as his own offensive coordinator for the first year, which certainly would have been more of a drain on his energies.

With both of them, Holmgren has two key assistants who completely understand everything the new staff will be implementing.

"Mike brought Sherman and Ray here, so they know what he wants," running backs coach Gil Haskell says. "It saves a lot of time. In '83, when we went to the Rams (on John Robinson's staff), we had all new people. I remember sitting in offensive meetings for hours and hours talking about one play, how to run it.

"Here, it is, 'This is how we do it,' boom, and let's go. That's a big, big plus in (Holmgren's) organization, to get those two guys."

The 49ers admittedly dragged their feet through the entire process and wound up losing both coaches.

Rhodes was offered the 49ers' defensive coordinator position to get him to stay but it amounted to little more than a minor shuffling of titles with little change in responsibility. Defensive coordinator Bill McPherson would have been bumped up to assistant head coach under George Seifert to make room for Rhodes.

"To me, the challenge here is the greater challenge," Rhodes says.

"It's an opportunity for me to get away from that situation and be on my own. At San Francisco, George Seifert was a great defensive football coach who still does a great deal of work with the defense.

"I really felt, I was being offered the coordinator's job, but it really wasn't a coordinator's job. I didn't want to be there just to be there. I didn't just want the title. I want to work. I want to make sure I do my part."

Lewis had talks with Seifert about the offensive coordinator position vacated by Holmgren, but no formal offer had been extended when Holmgren called offering the Packers job. So Lewis went with the sure thing.

"It was a little tough," Lewis says. "I was just kind of waiting to see what they (49ers) were going to do. They called me in. We discussed it. He (Seifert) told me he would make the decision later. A week went by, then Mike made me the offer here.

"They (49ers) still weren't ready to make a decision. So I just decided I wasn't going to wait any longer. It was disappointing because I thought I was qualified and ready to be a coordinator there. But that's his (Seifert's) decision to make. You can't knock a guy for making it."

It's somewhat surprising that after all those years with the 49ers, Rhodes and Lewis would finally get their breaks with another team.

But it's fitting that the two would still share in this triumph with each other, for they have much in common. In addition to their friendship and their backgrounds with the 49ers, both were successful two-way players.

As a halfback-defensive back at Michigan State, Lewis finished third in the Heisman Trophy voting in 1963. He went on to play as a defensive back for two years in Canada and for two years with the New York Jets before a knee injury ended his career.

Rhodes, drafted out of Tulsa, was a wide receiver and later a defensive back in an eight-year pro career with the New York Giants and 49ers.

As former players, both are known for their ability to relate to players,

"All I know is their players play hard for them, they respect them and they like them," Holmgren says. "Now, you don't always have to like your coach. I'm not saying that. But I think it helps."

Both Lewis and Rhodes have the utmost respect for each other.

Lewis on Rhodes: "He's a fine teacher, first of all. He motivates his guys. They play hard for him. He gets real close to his players. Spends a lot of time with them. They respect him. They know he used to play. I think the players respect him right away. The fact he's been on four Super Bowl champion teams carries a lot of weight. Instant respect."

Rhodes on Lewis: "Sherm's been in the league a long time, plus the college ranks. He's an outstanding coach. Every position he coached at San Francisco, they excelled. He's a natural teacher."

Both are also supremely confident in their abilities to get the job done in Green Bay.

"I've been in the game now for 11 years," Rhodes says. "I don't know how long you've got to be in the game to get a (coordinator's) position. But in 11 years of coaching, then I also played pro football, I have a pretty good background in the game.

"I just wanted to make sure I was patient enough and didn't get frustrated by waiting. I've been patient and I finally got the opportunity."

The fact that both Lewis and Rhodes happen to be African Americans made their hirings historically significant. The Packers are the first team in the history of the NFL to have two African American coordinators at the same time.

But the two have tried not to make a big issue out of that aspect of their hirings.

"It's significant, in a way, I guess, because it's never happened before," Lewis says. "You can't say it's not (significant). But we were ready for this. It just happened to be that we were on the same staff, a successful team. It was just time for it to happen."

Many might argue it was way past time.

Lewis and Rhodes don't see this as the end of the line for them, either. They saw what happened to Holmgren after his success as a coordinator and are hoping similar success by them will result in similar opportunities down the line. Both make it clear they want to be head coaches in the NFL.

"I have said to them, I would do everything I could to help them meet their goals and aspirations in this business," Holmgren says. "Some day they're going to be going on, too. They'll get their chance to be head coaches. But in the meantime, I'm glad to have them."

THE NEW STAFF
IT'S A GOOD BLEND

by Tom Mulhern
The Milwaukee Sentinel

Steve Mariucci represents one end of the Green Bay Packers' new coaching spectrum.

The team's quarterbacks coach is just 36 and has a limited background in the National Football League, but is considered to be a bright, energetic up-and-coming coach.

Tom Lovat represents the other end of the spectrum.

The team's offensive line coach is 53 and the senior member of the Packers' new staff. He is seasoned and well-respected, having spent 11 seasons in the NFL.

From Mariucci to Lovat, the staff of assistant coaches hired by Mike Holmgren is a diverse bunch.

Which is just the way Holmgren planned it.

"One of the factors in hiring these men was staff chemistry," Holmgren said. "I've said this before, the blend that I have of maturity and youth, of a more solid approach versus maybe a more reckless approach, I think it's a good blend.

"So far, it's working. Now we just have to see how it is under pressure, under the gun."

Holmgren seems to have borrowed from an old wedding ritual in choosing his staff: something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue.

In this case, the old would include defensive line coach Greg Blache, 42, and defensive backfield coach Dick Jauron, 41, who were retained from the previous staff.

The new would include special teams coach Nolan Cromwell, 36, who has been coaching for only one year, and offensive aide Jon Gruden, who has five years of experience but is only 28.

The borrowed are offensive coordinator Sherman Lewis, 41, and defensive coordinator Ray Rhodes, 49, brought with Holmgren from the staff of the San Francisco 49ers.

And the blue? Well, defensive aide Jim Lind, 44, is the former coach of the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire Blugolds, which is close enough.

Not only is the staff diverse, it's big. Holmgren hired 13 assistants, two more than the staff of previous coach Lindy Infante and the most ever on a Packer coaching staff.

Rounding out the staff, in addition to those already mentioned, are:

- Gil Haskell, 48, running backs coach;
- Andy Reid, 33, tight ends and offensive line;
- Bob Valesente, 51, linebackers;
- Kent Johnston, 35, strength and conditioning.

On the whole, it's a young staff, averaging 41.3 years, compared to an average of 45.1 for Infante's staff in its first year.

Holmgren said he was hoping to draw upon coaches with both college and pro backgrounds, and that is what he did. He said he wanted his defensive coordinator, offensive line coach and if possible, offensive coordinator to have pro experience. He hit on all three.

In addition to those three, Valesente, Haskell and Johnston all have extensive experience in the pros.

Culled from the college ranks were Mariucci, Reid, Gruden and Lind.

"I think (pro coaching experience) is important for certain positions," Holmgren said. "Other than that, I wanted a mix of college and pro coaches. Maturity, experience and some youth. That's what I strove for in putting the staff together."

Lovat said: "I think that (mix) is good, especially when you have a fresh start. Sometimes you get too many experienced people and you never even get out of the huddle because everybody's got his own way to break the huddle. In these situations, you don't want to reinvent the wheel, you just want to get off and get going. And Mike knows what he wants to do. That's what we're here to do."

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about this group of coaches is that in an off-season in which there were nine head coaching changes in the league and unprecedented movement of coaches, Holmgren was able to get almost everyone he wanted.

"I would have to say I got the people I wanted," Holmgren said.

If you're looking for common threads among the names, here are two: enthusiasm and teaching.

It's only natural for a new coaching staff to be enthusiastic, but the infusion of young coaches in new roles has certainly added to that feeling. It starts at the top, where Holmgren is a head coach for the first time at any level and both Lewis and Rhodes are in their first years as coordinators.

"Age-wise, it's a young group," Haskell said. "But they're all very good teachers. Very enthusiastic. Sometimes that's taken for granted. You can be on staffs where guys are late in their careers and they know they're not going anywhere, just marking days. This is not like that.

"There's no substitute for enthusiasm, no matter how old you are and no matter what the level. Enthusiasm generates more enthusiasm. The players feel it. They get a little zip. All of a sudden it's fun."

The teaching aspect also starts at the top with Holmgren, a former high school teacher, and runs through the entire staff.

"I can just tell he's a great teacher by how he's teaching me the offense," Mariucci said of Holmgren. "He makes a real versatile offense seem simple when he explains it to you. I can see why he's been such a good quarterbacks coach. He can teach."

The same could probably be said of the rest of the staff as well.

"As I look at it, Mike has put a great deal of thought into putting a staff together," Valesente said. "I know that being a teacher is an important part of being a coach. Every person on this staff is in that particular mode."

Holmgren will be a hands-on coach, calling the plays and getting involved in the on-field day-to-day coaching. But he said as his staff gets more familiar with the new system, he will lean on his assistants more.

"I'm learning now, and I have to continue to learn, to delegate," Holmgren said. "I'm going to be very involved on the offensive side of the ball, particularly the first year. Then, after that, we'll see how it goes.

"I'm under the feeling that if you hire somebody and say this is your job, then let them work and provide an atmosphere and help and support in getting that job done—you get a better job done. So that's going to be my approach."

Holmgren doesn't want his assistant coaches to be strangers in the players' locker room.

"My coaches are going to be involved in the locker room," Holmgren said. "It's not the players' territory only. I want those guys (coaches) in there. And I want a player, if he's got something on his mind, to be able to tell a coach about it, instead of another player.

"Now, they don't always do that. I understand that. But those are the types of coaches I have on the staff."

While getting his first glimpse at his players in two off-season mini-camps Holmgren was also seeing his coaching staff at work for the first time. If anything, the feelings he had about his assistants when he first hired them were stronger after watching them on the practice field. "I really do like the staff," Holmgren said. "You'd be surprised if I said anything else. I'll go a step further. I'm very excited about the guys we have here. They're working very, very hard. They're working very well together at a very early stage of this staff's existence.

"I couldn't be happier."

A QUORUM AT QUARTERBACK

Michael Bauman
The Milwaukee Journal

In the space of little more than three years, the Green Bay Packers' quarterback situation has gone from terrific to unsettled to bleak, to, once again, promising.

That's a lot of distance to travel at just one position. But the quarterback outlook mirrored, not at all coincidentally, the fortunes of the entire football team.

When Don Majkowski was at the top of his game, so were the Packers. That occurred in 1989. The Packers were 10-6, but seemed even better than that, because so many of the victories were last-second, come-from-behind efforts that seemed as heroic as they were improbable.

But when Majkowski was injured or off his form, the Packers stumbled. That occurred in 1990 and 1991. For 1992, there is reason to hope that Majkowski will be closer to good health and peak efficiency. An experienced quarterback, Mike Tomczak, will likely return as backup. But there's a new man on hand, the hoped-for solution to the long-term future of the quarterback position, Brett Favre.

There is also another factor in the equation—1990 Heisman Trophy winner Ty Detmer of Brigham Young, acquired in the ninth round of the 1992 NFL draft. Although the 230th player chosen—presumably passed over until then because of his size (6-0 and 182 pounds)—Detmer has intriguing credentials, having set no fewer than 59 NCAA passing records at BYU.

The acquisition of Favre was evidence that the new management team in Green Bay was not going to wait quietly for events to unfold. This was a dramatic action by the Packers, who traded their second draft choice in the first round, the 17th pick overall, for a quarterback who would be in his second year and who had seen limited action in his rookie season.

Don Majkowski, coming off a hamstring injury which caused him to miss six of the last seven games of the 1991 season, has been designated as the starting quarterback by new head coach Mike Holmgren coming into the 1992 season.

The trade with the Atlanta Falcons was, if nothing else, a bonanza for the radio call-in shows. The opinion that the Packers had overspent to acquire Favre was voiced and voiced again. People remembered, all too vividly perhaps, the selection of quarterback Rich Campbell with the sixth pick of the 1981 draft. That choice didn't exactly turn the franchise around. Further back in the memory bank of unfortunate quarterback draft transactions, there was the 1974 deal in which Dan Devine mortgaged the future for John Hadl, a quarterback on the decline.

But the two opinions that mattered were in total agreement on the other side of the issue. Those belonged to new Packer general manager Ron Wolf and new head coach Mike Holmgren. Wolf and Holmgren carry none of the baggage of previous miscalculations with them. Maybe the trade of a first-round choice for an untested pro quarterback looked to many others like a big gamble. To Wolf and Holmgren, it appeared more like a solid bet.

"It was done with a lot of thought," Wolf said. "To me, the most important thing in professional football is having a person at that position. I think we've got a future here in this guy.

"He's a tough guy. He's a leader. He's smart enough to grasp this system. But understand, it might take him some time to do that."

If Majkowski is healthy, Favre will have that time. If Favre is the long-term future, Majkowski is still the present and the immediate future.

"I wasn't terribly concerned about quarterback, but this gave us a chance to solidify the position," Holmgren said. "If Don is healthy, we have two guys who have won games and played well. Now I've got a young guy I can teach the offense to. Don Majkowski is the starting quarterback. I don't think a guy loses his job because of an injury."

That seems only fair. But what was it about Favre that made the Packers stake the future on a mere second-round draft choice? For starters, size, arm strength and competitive instincts.

Favre, 22, is 6-2 and 225 pounds. He had an impressive college career at Southern Mississippi. It was made more impressive by a comeback from adversity. In July, 1990, he suffered a cracked vertebra, a concussion and numerous cuts in an auto accident. About three weeks later, he was rushed to a hospital for emergency surgery in which 30 inches of his intestine were removed. Five weeks after leaving the hospital, he led Southern Mississippi to an upset victory over Alabama.

That episode justifiably impressed scouts who were looking at Favre in the 1991 draft. He was viewed then as a rough talent. But he was also viewed as tough.

"Very courageous kid," Ron Hughes, Detroit scout, said. "He was in that car accident and he came back and played. He was sick and he lost a lot of weight. Very competitive kid."

"He is so interesting," Buffalo scout John Butler said. "I think he's just a pure winner. Anything you wanted to play, even shooting marbles, he wants to win so bad. He reminds me temperament-wise of Jim Kelly."

And Reed Johnson, Denver scout, weighed in with this view of Favre: "He really competes. I think he's got charisma and leadership qualities, that old Archie Manning, Huckleberry Finn good old guy stuff. He's been in charge."

Testimonials like that don't come easily in the National Football League, especially for a player who hadn't yet played a down. The doubters would say, yes, but he was just a third-string quarterback in Atlanta. Why? Well, he was just a rookie. And the Falcons' run-and-shoot offense required a lot of rollout passing. Favre believes he will be more comfortable as a drop-back passer in Holmgren's system.

"There won't be any adjustment for me because all my life I've been a drop-back passer," Favre said. "Playing one year in a run-and-shoot, not getting any practice time, it wasn't like I changed any. Hey, this offense is going to be for me.

"I have a lot to learn, not only about this offense, but about the NFL. But I'm a big guy with a strong arm. I'm an intelligent guy when it comes to football. And I'm a competitor."

Favre will be making a couple of other transitions along the way, like from the heat and humidity of the Deep South to whatever the conditions feel like being in the upper Midwest. He grew up in Kiln, a little town in the delta region of Mississippi. He has described the area this way:

"Around here, there's people who can tear down an engine by the time they're 11 or 12. To tell the truth, you pretty much did what your daddy did before you. Mostly, the people work on cars all day, party at night and wrap it all up with a few barroom brawls."

If you eliminate the barroom brawls part, it's a usable background. Favre in a sense is doing what his "daddy" did. His father coached his high school football team. Favre may have the makings of a colorful character. To the Packers, though, the thing is that they think they have the makings of a professional quarterback.

"We've answered what I consider the pressing problem of finding a young quarterback," Wolf said. "I consider him a guy that has a chance in a couple years to be more than just a starter. His talent needs to be harnessed, but we have the best guy to harness it that I've ever known. It's up to us."

In the meantime, it's probably up to Majkowski. Three years ago, there wasn't any talk about any other quarterbacks in Green Bay. It was all Majkowski, brave and brilliant and Majik.

But then there was a lengthy contract dispute and holdout at the beginning of the 1990 season. Then there was an injury and eventually, surgery on his right shoulder to repair a torn rotator cuff. When Majkowski returned to play in 1991, a hamstring injury took him out of action in mid season.

For a time, in Majkowski's absence, Anthony Dilweg looked like he might be the answer at quarterback. But only for a time. Blair Kiel had his moments. But those were only moments. Tomczak won some games, but lost more. Quarterback wasn't the only position where the Packers struggled in the last two seasons, but it was the most obvious one.

When Majkowski returned last season, there was considerable debate about whether he had lost some arm strength. If he had not, it would have been miraculous. He had major shoulder

Mike Tomczak, a Plan B addition from the Chicago Bears, started the last seven games of the 1991 season and passed for a team-leading eleven touchdowns.

Brett Favre, acquired from the Atlanta Falcons for a first round draft choice in an off-season trade, is looked upon as the Packers' quarterback of the future.

surgery, then came back quickly. The hamstring injury, painful though it was, may have been a blessing in disguise.

"I came back pretty quick (after surgery)", Majkowski said. "I probably could have used two months or so before the season started. But I didn't have that time. I think definitely with the off-season of rest I'll come back stronger."

That view was supported in a spring mini-camp as Majkowski appeared to regain his form. "He pushed his way through this camp and he did very well," Steve Mariucci, the Packers' new quarterback coach, said. "I think he's gaining confidence in his arm again. I thought in the last couple of practices he's been more on target.

"Don mentioned to me that he lost some confidence in himself. I think that would have happened to anybody. Getting that confidence back will require him feeling healthy and being successful. Everybody talks about regaining (his '89 form). The goal around here is to be better than he was in '89. I don't believe that's unrealistic."

Holmgren left little doubt that the immediate task of reviving the Packers' offense rested on Majkowski. "Don has to be the guy," the coach said. "If a nose tackle doesn't play well, they might gash you for a few runs over the middle, but so what? If the right guard gets beat a couple of times, so what? If the quarterback has a bad game, it's over. Particularly what I'm asking them to do."

After the promise of 1989, there have been some grim times at quarterback, with Majkowski ailing and the Packers not feeling too well in the standings, either. Majkowski acknowledged that late in the 1991 season, saying:

"I can see how the fans are a little bit down on our team and on me. All it takes is winning a couple games in a row and they'll be back. I don't mind people being hard on me right now or being hard on the team because basically we deserve it."

Rut now, for 1992, the outlook seems brighter. Majkowski appears to be on the mend. Tomczak as the backup quarterback, would be more than competent. Beyond that, the Packers are betting the future on Brett Favre, who is widely acknowledged to have great potential.

And in the equation somewhere, must be Holmgren, nothing less than a master at working with and developing quarterbacks during his years with the San Francisco 49ers. There is the feeling that if anybody can make this set of circumstances work, it's the new head coach.

The Packers' quarterback situation for 1992 cannot fairly be labeled as a lock or a sure thing or anything like that. Majkowski's return to form is not improbable, but after rotator surgery questions will linger until he answers them on the field. And Favre, while he is a legitimate hope, is still a hope for the future.

But there are also signs that solutions to the problems of the last two years are on hand. Majkowski is 28 and, more than ever, determined to regain his status as an impact quarterback. And the arrival of Favre indicates the Packers' willingness to take bold steps to deal with the long-term future at quarterback. At this critical position there is once again, in Green Bay, legitimate hope for much better days.

Ty Detmer, 1990's Heisman Trophy winner, who set 59 NCAA passing records at Brigham Young, adds an intriguing element to the Packers' quarterback equation.

Tony Bennett, who matured into one of the NFL's premier pass rushers in 1991, closes in on Buffalo Bills' quarterback Jim Kelly for one of his 13 sacks.

TONY BENNETT PRO BOWL BOUND?

by Dale Hofmann
The Milwaukee Sentinel

Movie day in late November, and Tony Bennett is not enjoying the show. It is set in Milwaukee County Stadium where the Green Bay Packers have staged a rare happy ending at the expense of the Indianapolis Colts.

There were only four such days last season, but still, the coaches aren't content. At least not with the role played by their talented, young outside linebacker.

Time and again they watch Bennett close in on Colts quarterback Jeff George and almost put him on his back. "Almost" may be the most expensive word in the National Football League.

It certainly cost Bennett a good deal of anxiety on that particular day. Maybe it has cost him more than that.

"Last year I had 13 sacks," the former Mississippi All-American recalled as he reviewed the scene. "That's not bad, but I should have had at least 19 or 20. I missed that many over the course of the season.

"I missed four in the Colt game alone. When we looked at that film, it made the coaches crazy. They just kept saying stuff like, 'Well, I guess he didn't want that sack. I guess he didn't really care about that one.'

"That's something you look back on and don't forget. If I had just followed through and made the sacks I could have made last year, it's possible it could have meant the Pro Bowl. There shouldn't be any of those this year."

Last year Bennett spotted fellow linebacker Bryce Paup a big early season lead and then closed with a rush to become the Packers' premier passer punisher. He not only led them in sacks, but he was second in solo tackles and tied for second with Paup in fumbles forced.

And this year? Well, that's what the customers are lined up to see. They've watched the previews, and there are those who expect this powerful, agile and still-young man to become the next box office smash.

There are others who think he'll be just another competent pro. Best supporting actor maybe, but not the leading man the Packers had in mind when they spent the 18th choice on him in the 1990 draft.

One thing is certain. The only one who can determine which of those people is right is Tony Bennett.

"A lot depends on Tony and how hard he wants to work on it," said Packer defensive line coach Greg Blache when asked just how good a pass rusher Bennett can be. As one of two survivors of Lindy Infante's previous administration, and the man who developed Bennett's pass rushing talents, Blache knows what he's talking about.

As a 20-year veteran of the coaching trade, he also knows you get what you earn in this business.

"Tony is a young guy who will keep getting better," said Blache. "He's improved a great deal already, but there are still great strides that he needs to make and that he will make. He has just scratched the surface of his potential.

"To become a Hall of Famer or a consistent Pro Bowl player, you have to be among a very elite group of people. Those are people who are blessed with talent and who work very hard all the time to stay at the very highest level. You can't do it on ability alone."

When Blache looks at Bennett, he sees all the talents a promising pro linebacker could ever use. He also sees the man the Packers need to play a very important part in a new defensive scheme next season.

It's called the "elephant defense," and it comes compliments of the San Francisco 49ers, who just happened to employ new Packer defensive coordinator Ray Rhodes last season.

The elephant features a four-man front and a strong, mobile outside linebacker who often lines up in a three-point stance like a defensive end and harasses the quarterback half to death.

In San Francisco, that linebacker was three-time all-pro Charles Haley. In Green Bay, it just might be Bennett.

"He has the talent to be that guy," said Blache. "He has speed, strength, leverage and a feel for the football. He also has the talent to be a great drop back linebacker. He's just one of those people who's blessed with a great deal of ability.

"It's a matter of what he's willing to bring to the job. Tony is a smart kid and a great kid. He's an excellent human being, and he's not lazy by any stretch of the imagination.

"But sometimes this game is like dealing with your own kids. If you've ever had kids, you understand that people can think they're working hard, but there's more inside there to give."

Like Blache, Bennett believes he's a long way from reaching the top of his game. And like Blache, he realizes it won't be a gentle climb.

"I would like to become known as one of the best, if not the best, pass rushers in the league," he said. "It's going to take a lot of work and a lot of time.

"But I'm a very patient person. Pass rushing is strategy. You take somebody like Mike Kenn. He's been there a long time, and he knows every trick in the book."

While Bennett admires Atlanta's 14-year veteran defensive tackle, his own biggest boosters have somebody else in mind when they make comparisons. Somebody with a little higher profile. Somebody named Lawrence Taylor.

They note that while the New York Giants' perennial All-pro linebacker is a little bigger than Bennett, their physical gifts are similar. And so is their objective in life: To make the world unsafe for quarterbacks.

Both of them seem to be in the right place at the right time. While Taylor thrives in media rich New York, Bennett is anything but a headline grabber. He lives alone in his home in Green Bay, enjoys the town and enjoys its people as long as they're willing to respect his privacy. And he would certainly like to help them enjoy their Sundays this season. "I'm not Lawrence Taylor," said Bennett. "I've never met Lawrence Taylor. I'm a different person. I'm Tony Bennett.

"I understand what the people are saying. They're talking about speed and strength and sacks. But I'm sure we're totally different people.

"He's known for rushing and getting the quarterback, and I want to be known for the same things."

That's what Bennett has had in mind since he arrived here and what the Packers have had in mind for him as well. After a slower start than either of them would have liked, they're gaining on it.

In his rookie season, Bennett played mainly as a rusher in third-and-long situations. He recorded his first NFL sack in the Packers' opener against Los Angeles, but he would get only two more that year.

He played in 14 games, but started none while learning on the job behind the flamboyant Tim Harris.

Now Harris is gone and Bennett is the man the team is counting on to make good things happen in its new defensive scheme.

"I didn't play as much in my rookie year as No.1 draft choices usually do," Bennett said. "It wasn't as if I didn't have a role, because I did go in on third down situations and play on special teams.

"But I didn't get to the quarterback as much as people might have thought a first-round draft choice should. It made me feel a little bad that I didn't do as well as I wanted to do or as well as the coaches wanted me to do."

Bennett came much closer to meeting the original expectations last season. And now with a new role in a new defense, he may start exceeding them.

"I'm very excited about it," he said. "It's an opportunity for me to do better, not only for myself but for the team."

It's also an opportunity to continue the upward trend in his career that began last season. If Bennett can improve as much between his second and third seasons as he did between his first and second, the Packers could just have one very potent pass rusher on their hands.

It is a lot to ask, of course.

"I'll tell you this much," said Bennett. "I'm definitely willing to do the work it takes to get there."

That should be all that's required to make movies better than ever for Tony Bennett.

TRADITION

Tradition. It's something that's vitally important to the Green Bay Packers, and to Packer fans throughout Wisconsin and around the world. After all, the great tradition of Packer football has brought a lot of glory to Green Bay.

Another Packer tradition that has spanned the generations in Green Bay is the 45-year partnership between the Packers and WNFL—Talk Radio 1440. Every year since 1947, WNFL has provided the hometown fans with year 'round Packer Coverage and the most complete, exclusive Packer Game Day coverage anywhere. The tradition continues this year with Packer Radio broadcasters Jim Irwin and Max McGee, and WNFL Sports Director Bill Scott.

Tony Mandarich, here displaying commendable intensity at right tackle, takes on a new role this season at guard, considered by some to be his best position.

MANDARICH ON GUARD

by Kevin Isaacson
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Tony Mandarich popped in the dusty videotape, sat down in the basement of his rural Pulaski home and began laughing out loud.

"The outrageous things the guy was saying, I couldn't believe it," says Mandarich, chuckling at the memory.

The comedian's name: "Tony Mandarich."

It has been three years since Mandarich and his then-girlfriend, Amber Ligon, compiled videotapes from his almost-daily TV appearances, including visits with David Letterman, ESPN interviewer Roy Firestone and actor Judd Hirsch from the NBC sitcom "Dear John".

"My plan was to let people know who Tony Mandarich is, and to have Tony Mandarich as a household name," Mandarich said. "I think both of those were accomplished."

And then some.

Mandarich heard himself say that, as the second pick overall in the 1989 draft, he deserved more money than No. 1 selection Troy Aikman. That he was willing and able to defeat boxing heavyweight champion Mike Tyson. That he'd much prefer residing and playing football on the West Coast than in the "village" of Green Bay. That he would become the greatest tackle in National Football League history.

Four years later, Mandarich just laughs.

"There were some things that I said that I just can't believe," he says. "I thought, 'Oh, my god. What the hell did I do?' You talk about a cocky person. I could not believe it," he says.

That's because the Tony Mandarich who playfully chases 15-month-old Holly Mandarich around his year-round Northeastern Wisconsin residence is nothing like the hard-rocking Guns N' Roses fanatic whose cutting comments shocked the Green Bay faithful early and often in his Packers career. He's generally satisfied with the financial security provided in his $4.4 million, four-year contract. He very much doubts he could have outpunched Mike Tyson. He revels in Midwest living, claiming he'd suffocate after more than a minute in L.A.

"I think if you were to show them (the three-year-old videotapes) to somebody, and then have them spend two or three weeks with me now, they'd have to think that guy was my evil twin brother," Mandarich said.

Oh, and about being the greatest tackle in NFL history?

"I have a new position this year,'" Mandarich says. "Now I want to be the greatest guard in NFL history."

A coy smile accompanies the comment. But Mandarich quickly intimates that he's not taking lightly this chance for redemption, afforded by the combined hirings of head coach Mike Holmgren and offensive line coach Tom Lovat and the off-season trade with Phoenix for veteran right tackle Tootie Robbins.

"The last time I had fun playing football was in college," Mandarich says. "Football's a job that you can have fun doing. But it's only fun when you're doing well on the field, and when your team's winning. For me so far with the Green Bay Packers, football has only been a job."

He imagines explaining his career to little Holly when she's "4 or 5" and hopes by then he'll have more positives to detail.

"Obviously I'm not going to talk to her about all the steroid allegations, all that stuff I was accused of, "Mandarich said. "I don't want to tell her that, yeah, Dad had a really lousy rookie year. The second year he played but not real good, and the third year he started playing a little better. I'd skip over that stuff, just like any father would.

"I do think I was just getting tackle down to where I was really comfortable," Mandarich said. "But now I've got a new position in a new offense, with new coaches, new everything. And I really think that, in this offense, guard is the best place for Tony Mandarich."

Obviously, Holmgren and Lovat agree.

"He's taken a lot of shots since he's been here: Verbally, physically, in the media, whatever," Holmgren said. "Tackles, in general, are kind of out there by themselves: You can handle a guy all day, then get beat for a sack and you're a bum.

"This will take advantage of a strength of his. At the same time, he's not as vulnerable to that great, quick, fast pass rusher."

Although he was amazingly successful as a left tackle at Michigan State, Mandarich now thinks his best NFL position might always have been guard. He's firm in the belief that he can play successfully at either tackle, but readily admits his physical attributes, speed in open areas and strength in confined areas, are best-suited to his new position.

"People don't understand that the NFL is a totally different game," he said. "At Michigan State, we ran the ball. It was boring but we won, so we didn't have to do anything else. We'd throw four, five times a game, and half of those were play-action. In college, I never had to pass-block against a Reggie White, and now you see guys in that league every week."

He still cringes at the memory of the Eagles' White rushing around, through and finally OVER a chop-blocking Mandarich during a 31-0 loss late in his second season.

"Oh, that hurt," Mandarich says. "With the protections we had set up, I just wasn't able to handle a player like that."

Mandarich improved markedly last season, something even White admitted after the Eagles' 20-3 season opening victory. But he still struggled in pass protection, particularly against the NFL's premier speed rushers.

"You're on an island out there, a really big island. And it gets even bigger with a (Pat) Swilling or a Howie Long," said Mandarich. "You have so much respect for inside moves, because it's the shortest way to the quarterback. Then you have speed guys, they don't necessarily have to be strong. They can just get you off balance. If you don't have your feet under you, a little kid can push you over."

Despite Mandarich's struggles, neither Holmgren nor Lovat were initially committed to moving Mandarich to guard. But when Robbins, a polished 11-year veteran with, in Lovat's estimation, "a few good years left in him" was shopped by the Phoenix Cardinals, the Packers suddenly had a wild card to play with.

"Tony's a good tackle," Lovat said. "But at the time he came into the league, people probably overestimated him as a pass blocker. (Guard) is probably a more comfortable position for a lineman. I think he'll enjoy it."

As the Packers enter training camp, coaches continue to label the "Mandarich Move" experimental. He could receive strong consideration at left tackle if Ken Ruettgers' health problems continue, and could also return to right tackle if Robbins falters. But Holmgren says he's convinced Mandarich can position himself for a successful career at his new position.

"He has to adapt well. That's the mark of a great football player," Holmgren said. "And, yes, I do think Tony Mandarich can be a great football player."

Mandarich smiles at the thought of greatness, of finally answering the state and national pundits who tore into the 300-pounder even before the ink was dry on the four-year, $4.4 million contract he will complete this season.

"The media has pretty much ripped me apart," said Mandarich, who refused to answer reporters' questions in the early portion of last season. "I've saved some of those stories for inspiration."

Even with media-made motivation, however, Mandarich is not convinced that he'll ever recapture the individual who dominated opponents for Michigan State in fall 1987. In fact, he might not want to.

"I think I might have been in the prime of my career then," Mandarich said, "if only because nobody has ever been, or will be, that dominant in the NFL.

"That was a great time for me. To tell the truth, with the (pre-draft) stories and interviews and everything, I was eating it all up."

Somewhere between "Late Night with David Letterman" and the "Bozo" nickname bestowed by Bears' Coach Mike Ditka, Mandarich had had enough. But it hasn't ebbed. During a bear hunting trip in Alaska last month, he walked through the tiny airport at King Salmon, nearly two hours north of Anchorage.

"The biggest passenger plane it lands is a 12-seater," Mandarich said. "I signed 20 autographs.

"What I've learned is you can't turn it off when you want to. I'm not the guy you saw on TV a few years ago. But when people think about Tony Mandarich, they think about the guy who was on the cover of Sports Illustrated.

"The guy that was the No. 2 pick in the whole draft but never panned out yet.

"The guy with all the tattoos. The guy who likes Guns N' Roses. The guy driving a Harley and running over people. That's not me."

Of course, Guns N' Roses remains prominent in his CD collection. and he continues to add tattoos, the most recent including a grizzly and a Harley-Davidson logo. But Mandarich cites a tremendous difference between perception and reality, particularly among the Packers' fan following.

"I like tattoos. So what. Does that make me a biker, a criminal? No," he said. "It's like, the one who hasn't sinned, cast the first stone."

Mandarich sees extreme irony in his outlaw reputation. "My wife and I are in the Disney store at Fox River Mall, buying stuff for Holly," he relates. "Some people see me and start pulling their kids away, like I'm a bad guy. And I'm holding Mickey Mouse in my hand." He keeps his motorcycle rides rural, for safety concerns. He doesn't drink much, "maybe 24 beers in the last 18 months." He spends the vast majority of his free time at home with Amber and Holly.

"My family is No. 1 on my list," he says firmly.

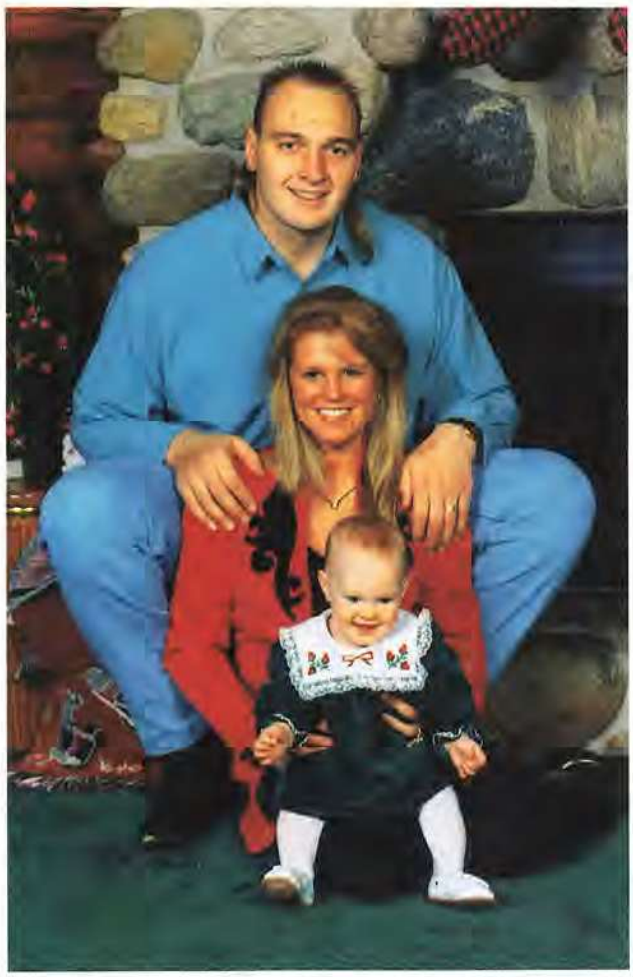
Mandarich is reminded of a statement he made four years ago. As part of his denial of previous steroid use, the then 22-year-old said he'd consider acquiring chemical help if his body wasn't performing up to previous standards.

The new Tony Mandarich shakes his head.

"There's no way I'd risk my life and possibly deprive that child of having a father," he said. "Money's nothing without your health.

"If, for some reason, Mike Holmgren says that I'm not working out and that nobody wants me, that's OK. Money can't buy you love. It can't buy you a lot of things. I have enough money. I just want my family to be happy.

"My wife was with me when I was at Michigan State. She knows what I can do. I just hope I can show it to everybody else."



They're No. 1 with him. Tony, who has quickly become a devoted husband and father, poses before the family fireplace with his wife, Amber, and daughter, Holly.

1992 DRAFT

BUCKLEY'S THE ONE

Flamboyant Terrell Buckley, who has a knack for doing the spectacular, made Packer history before he ever donned Green Bay's traditional green and gold.

The colorful and controversial Florida State athlete was essentially named a starter the day he was drafted—Sunday, April 26—when General Manager Ron Wolf and Head Coach Mike Holmgren made him the Packers' first round selection in the 1992 National Football League draft.

As far as team historians can determine, it is the first time since the NFL draft was inaugurated in 1936 that a Packer draftee has been so honored, head coaches being customarily loath to label any rookie—no matter how gifted—as an immediate starter.

But Holmgren did not equivocate when the subject arose during a post-pick news conference on draft day.

"We said going in that whoever our number one pick was going to be—he was going to be a guy we could bring in here who could start and make things happen," the Packers' new head coach asserted.

"That's how we're projecting him."

Holmgren subsequently backed up his pronouncement by moving LeRoy Butler, the incumbent at right cornerback, to strong safety and Vinnie Clark, last year's backup at left corner, to right cornerback to make room for Buckley as the left side starter.

The 5-foot-9, 174-pound Buckley, the fifth player chosen in the NFL's 57th annual selection meeting, as the draft is formally known, accepted the news of his starting "assignment" with impressive equanimity.

Pronouncing himself ready, he said, "I think I'll make an impact—if not as a starter at least as a nickel back-kick-off returner."

Holmgren shares Buckley's confidence, describing him as "an offensive defensive player...He makes things happen."

The record eloquently confirms the description. Buckley broke Florida State's career interception record, making 21 thefts in his three years as a starter and shattering Deion Sanders' school mark for return yards (287) with 501, the latter figure also setting an NCAA record.

In the process, Buckley acquired a reputation as something of a "gambler," a proclivity with which Holmgren says he has no problem.

"It concerns me if he gets beat," he said of Buckley's daring style. "(But) that's one of the things that makes him great, though. You have to have the mentality that you're going to aggressively go after the football and if something bad happens, say I'm going after it again.

"Every once in a while, he'll gamble and get beat. The next play, boom, interception...We're going to tone him down a little, however."

Buckley, on his part, disputes the suggestion that he is excessively cocky and/or immodest.

"People who say I've got a problem don't know the difference between a person who is telling the truth and a person being arrogant," he said.

He also feels the media is "misinformed" about his reputation as an on-field gambler.

"I didn't give up but four touchdowns in four years," Buckley asserted. "Now that's a pretty good percentage, I believe. I'm not gambling. I'm just playing ball."

He also defends his style.

"My style is student-of-the-game, being aggressive," Buckley declared. "I know where you're going before you know it. I'm playing the top college players, Rocket Ismail, the Miami Hurricanes. How can you beat that? What else could you ask for from a corner?"

Buckley, whose four touchdowns on interception returns equaled Sanders' FSU mark, is the 66th first round draft choice in Packer history but only the fifth defensive back to be chosen with that premium pick—following Hall of Famer Herb Adderley of Michigan State (1961), Willie Buchanon of San Diego State (1972), Tim Lewis of Pittsburgh (1983) and Vinnie Clark of Ohio State (1991).

The Packers also focused on defense in the second round, tapping linebacker Mark D'Onofrio of Penn State, even though Holmgren conceded the talented Nittany Lion did not represent a need.

"We feel our linebacker group is strong, but we didn't feel we could pass up on him," he said of D'Onofrio (pronounced "Duh-NOFF-ree-oh"). "He's a quality, quality guy."

Described by Wolf as "a nasty son of a gun who wants to hurt people," the 6-foot-2, 236-pound North Bergen, NJ, native was benched in 1989 by Penn State coach Joe Paterno because of his bristling attitude and penchant for taunting opponents.

1 Terrell Buckley, the Packers' No. 1 draft choice from Florida State.

Packer defensive coordinator Ray Rhodes, impressed with D'Onofrio's intensity compares him to another ex-Penn State linebacker Matt Millen, who has gone on to star for the 49ers, Raiders and Redskins.

"He doesn't have the size but I would compare him to Millen," Rhodes said. "He's one of the players who has the same intensity. He's an outstanding football leader. He made all of Penn State's (defensive) calls. He's a guy who plays better than his numbers look."

D'Onofrio, counted upon to challenge "inside" starters Brian Noble and Johnny Holland and backups Bryce Paup and Burnell Dent for playing time, was a pre-season All-America selection in 1991 but missed the last four games of the season because of a shoulder injury. A year earlier, he led Penn State's highly respected defense in tackles with 71, including 45 unassisted stops.

The Packers shifted to offense in the third round, opting for South Carolina's Robert Brooks, whose credentials include having surpassed Sterling Sharpe's Gamecock record for touchdown receptions.

Brooks, 6 feet even and 175 pounds, made 19 TD catches over his four-year varsity career, two more than Sharpe accumulated. He also ranks second in South Carolina history in both receptions (156) and yards gained (2,211), figures surpassed only by Sharpe's 169 catches and 2,497 yards.

Brooks brings with him impressive credentials as a kick returner, having averaged 21.7 yards on kickoff returns and 10.9 yards on punt returns, a talent which is expected to enhance his bid for employment.

Convinced there was need to upgrade the running back positions, Wolf and Holmgren addressed the situation by drafting versatile Edgar Bennett of Florida State and king-sized Dexter McNabb of Florida in the fourth and fifth rounds.

The 5-11-1/2, 208-pound Bennett, regarded by most experts as the nation's best blocker at his position, also proved to be an effective runner and receiver for the Seminoles, averaging 4.1 yards for 296 career carries and snaring 93 passes for 1,095 yards, an 11.8 average.

Gil Haskell, the Packers' running backs coach, said of him, "He can block, he can catch and he can run. And not all the fellows can do that—and not all the fellows see themselves as blockers. But at Florida State, that was very much a part of his job, and he did it very well."

The imposing McNabb, 6-0 and 244 pounds, is described as "a slugger" by Wolf—presumably a good fit for the big fullback role in Holmgren's offense.

"I was looking for what I term a slugger," Wolf said. "Dexter McNabb is that type of player—he's a banger."

Although he did not carry the football often in Florida's pass-oriented offense, McNabb averaged an impressive 4.9 yards per attempt over his college career, gaining 542 yards in 111 carries.

"We're much more versatile now (with Bennett and McNabb)," Holmgren pointed out. "If I have to bang somebody or have a short yardage situation, or if we have the ball on the goal line, I have a guy that can do that now."

The Packers claimed a wide receiver in the fifth round—Orlando McKay of Washington's reigning Rose Bowl champions—a product of a fourth round, draft day trade with the 49ers, a transaction which saw the Packers swap fourth round picks with the 49ers (numbers 5 and 19) as well as their eighth round choice, and in return, received the 49ers' selections in the fifth and sixth rounds (Nos. 18 and 17, respectively).

Blessed with explosive acceleration and legitimate deep speed (4.42 in the '40'), McKay caught 47 passes for the Huskies in 1991 and closed out his career as the seventh ranking receiver in the school's history with 96 receptions.

The trade replaced the sixth round pick the Packers had dealt to Phoenix for veteran offensive tackle Tootie Robbins and they used it to expand the competition at tight end, selecting Mark Chmura of Boston College. A talented receiver, Chmura broke BC's career reception record, amassing 164 catches, including 47 in each of his sophomore and junior seasons. The South Deerfield, MS, native also is an accomplished deep snapper.

A second transaction—in the seventh round—found the Packers exchanging their fifth pick for the Raiders' 22nd selection, plus the Raiders' No. 16 pick in the ninth round, and they utilized their "new" seventh round choice to acquire a third wide receiver, Chris Holder of Tuskegee Institute.

Regarded as one of the premier athletes in the small college ranks, the 5-11-1/2, 185-pound Holder caught 161 passes over his four-year varsity career, closing out his tenure with an impressive 18.2-yard average per catch.

The Packers engineered one of the more intriguing selections of the entire draft by taking 1990 Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Ty Detmer of Brigham Young with their own pick in the ninth round (they had none in the eighth round, having tendered that choice to the 49ers earlier).

The second Heisman Trophy winner ever to be drafted by the Packers (Paul Hornung in 1957 was the first), Detmer presumably lasted as long as he did because of his modest dimensions (5-11-1/2 and 182 pounds), but Holmgren pointed out, "He has a lot of intangibles that aren't measured necessarily. And I think I know a little bit more about him than some people.

No. 2—Linebacker, Mark D'Onofrio Penn State

RINGTHEBELL.com on Archive.org

"He's a special young man. He won the Heisman...he threw for 500 yards against Penn State. He beat the University of Miami."

Wolf summed up, "There will be better athletes, but there won't be any tougher. He's got the guts of a burglar. He has won and he's an excellent competitor.

"He's just too good of a player to ignore."

Detmer's statistical credentials are imposing. He holds no fewer than 59 NCAA passing records, including most touchdown passes (135), most yards passing (15,031), most completions (958) and most attempts (1,530).

Having elicited more than a few raised eyebrows with that selection, the Packers closed out their draft by focusing on the other side of the football—taking nose tackle Shazzon

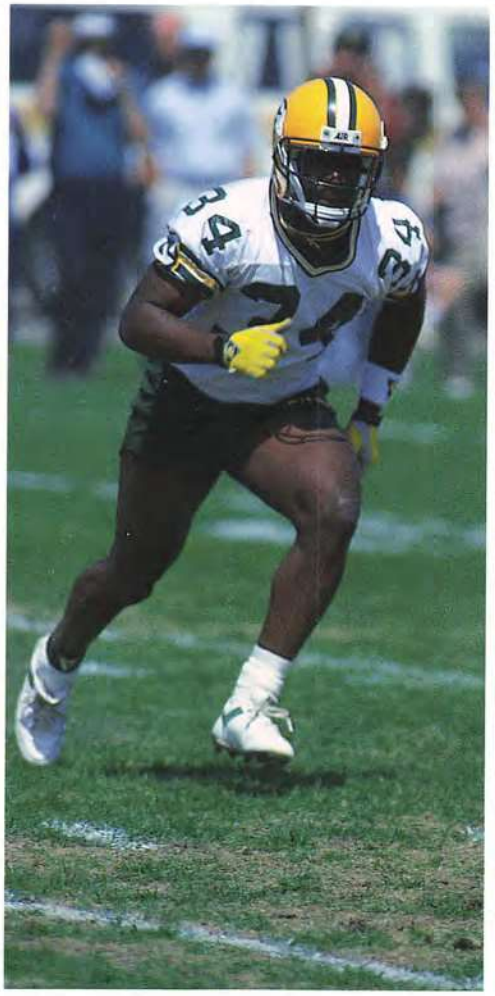
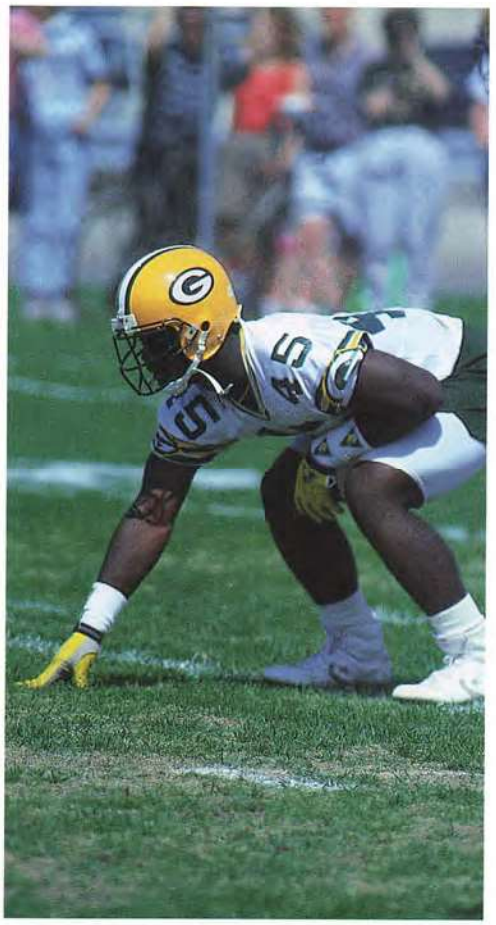
Packers switched 4th round picks with San Francisco (5 & 19) and in return received 49ers 18th pick in round 5 and 17th pick in round 6. Round 8 went to San Francisco.

Packers traded 5th pick in 7th round to LA Raiders for their 22nd pick in 7th and their 16th pick in round 9.

No. 3—Wide receiver, Robert Brooks South Carolina



No. 4—Fullback, Edgar Bennett Florida State



No. 5a—Fullback, Dexter McNabb Florida

Bradley of Tennessee with the ninth round pick they acquired from the Raiders, linebacker Gabe Mokwuah of American International in the eleventh round and linebacker Brett Collins of Washington in the twelfth round.

The lone exception to the pattern came in the tenth round when they opted for massive Andrew Oberg of North Carolina, a 6-foot-7, 300-pound offensive tackle.

Bradley, 6-1 and 272 pounds, started every game at left defensive tackle for Tennessee last season, collecting 62 tackles, 41 of them unassisted.

The 6-1, 254-pound Mokwuah, the first Nigerian-born defensive player ever to be drafted in the NFL, started every game of his four-year collegiate career for American International and was selected as Defensive Player of the Year by the New England Coaches' Association.

Collins, 6-2 and 228 pounds, was handicapped by a leg injury in 1991 but was an All-Pac 10 Conference second team selection a year earlier, when he moved into the starting lineup in the second game of the season (against Purdue) and registered 52 tackles overall.

Oberg, a Rochester, PA, native, started 32 of his last 33 games at North Carolina. Manning the right tackle position, he helped clear the way for a ground game that averaged 185.9 yards rushing per game in 1991.

Overall, the two-day process yielded seven players on the offensive side of the football and six on defense.

The Packers, the National Football League's most prolific players in Plan B over the first three years of the program, developed a different approach to the limited free agency "option" in 1992.

The emphasis was on quality, rather than quantity. In contrast to their previous method, when they signed a league-leading total of 20 'B' athletes in 1989 and 13 in each of their 1990 and 1991 opportunities, the Green and Gold settled for 10 signees this time around.

In the process, they cheerfully yielded honors to the Cleveland Browns, who led the NFL with 11 roster additions.

THE PLAN B EMPHASIS QUALITY

The new modus operandi was developed by Ron Wolf, who became the Packers' executive vice president and general manager last November, and new Head Coach Mike Holmgren, who pronounced himself as "real pleased" with the results.

"Our strategy this year in Plan B was to be selective—target a few people," Holmgren noted. "And Mike Reinfeldt (chief financial officer, who negotiates all player contracts) and Ron did a great job—as did our assistant coaches, who kind of recruited those guys.

"They did a great job and I'm real pleased with our Plan B guys."

The numbers reflect just how selective Wolf, Holmgren and Company were. Only 28 'B' free agents were flown into Green Bay for tryouts, compared to 50 to 55 in each of the first three years of the program.

But the signing ratio, in contrast, was considerably higher than in the two previous years, since better than one in every three of those 28 candidates subsequently found himself on the Packer roster.

And Holmgren, for one, had no reservations about the quality of those 10 newcomers.

"The people we picked up," he said, "strengthened our team right away."

They include, by position:

—THREE DEFENSIVE BACKS: cornerback Lewis Billups (Cincinnati Bengals) and safeties Charles Washington (Indianapolis Colts) and Adrian White (New York Giants);

—TWO WIDE RECEIVERS: Sanjay Beach (San Francisco 49ers) and Kitrick Taylor (San Diego Chargers);

—TWO OFFENSIVE LINEMEN: center/guard Frank Winters (Kansas City Chiefs) and guard/tackle David Viaene (New England Patriots);

—ONE DEFENSIVE LINEMAN: Frank Conover (Cleveland Browns);

—ONE LINEBACKER: Jeff Brady (Pittsburgh Steelers); and

—ONE DEEP SNAPPER: Mike McDonald (Los Angeles Rams).

Cornerback, Lewis Billups
Cincinnati Bengals

Billups, a five-year starter for Cincinnati, is expected to seriously contend with veteran Jerry Holmes and second year pro Vinny Clark for the starting assignment at right cornerback. The former North Alabama performer, a second round draft choice (he was the 38th player chosen in 1986), appeared in 13 games in 1991, his sixth NFL season, and started seven before being placed on injured reserve with a knee problem December 16.

The 28-year-old Tampa, FL, native, 5-foot-11 and 182 pounds, has had nine career interceptions, including four in 1988, a season in which he posted a career-high 57 tackles and recovered two fumbles.

The 6-foot-1 220-pound Washington and White, 6 feet and 200 pounds, are counted upon to push for starting status at strong safety. Washington played in all 16 games for the Chiefs last season, making one start as a backup to all-pro Deron Cherry. He later was released by the Chiefs prior to their first playoff game and later signed with the Colts as a free agent.

Washington, a seventh round draft choice out of Cameron University, entered the league in 1989 as a cornerback for Indianapolis. In March of 1990, he moved to Kansas City in Plan B, where he played cornerback that season before being converted to safety in 1991.

White, a veteran of five NFL seasons, appeared in 14 games for the Giants last season, registering 21 tackles, 15 unassisted. A second round draft selection in 1987, the former University of Florida athlete appeared to have the Giants' strong safety job locked up in 1990 when he suffered torn ligaments in his left knee in the pre-season finale against Cleveland. He subsequently underwent major surgery and was out for the season.

The 28-year-old Orange Park, FL, native previously had a productive season in 1989 as a key reserve safety in the Giants' nickel defense, finishing the year with 33 tackles and four pass deflections. He also forged two interceptions in one game, his returns setting up a pair of Giants' touchdowns.

Holmgren is well acquainted with Beach, who played in all 16 games for the 49ers last season when the Packers' new head coach was San Francisco's offensive coordinator. The ex-Colorado State "burner" caught four passes for 43 yards and averaged 5.3 yards for 10 punt returns and 18.5 yards for two kickoff returns. Originally signed by the Dallas Cowboys as a free agent in 1988, Beach later was on the New York Jets' developmental squad in 1989 before signing with the 49ers as a free agent in 1990. A four-year letterman as a collegian, he caught 85 passes for 1,074 yards and three touchdowns at Colorado State.

Taylor, 5-11 and 185 pounds, provides depth as a kick returner as well as at wide receiver. The 27-year-old Washington State product was one of the American Football Conference's leading punt returners in 1991, tying for third overall with a 9.6-yard average for 28 runbacks. He also caught 24 passes for 218 yards.

The ex-Charger was a fifth round draft choice of the Kansas City Chiefs in 1987, the 189th player chosen. After spending his rookie season on injured reserve with a groin injury, Taylor appeared in all 16 games in 1988, catching 9 passes for 105 yards and averaging 6.4 yards for 19 punt returns. Released following the '88 season, he was with the Patriots in 1989, appearing in four regular season games, prior to joining San Diego as a free agent December 12, 1990.

Taylor made an early impact as a Charger, returning a punt 55 yards for a touchdown against his original team, the Chiefs, in his second game with San Diego.

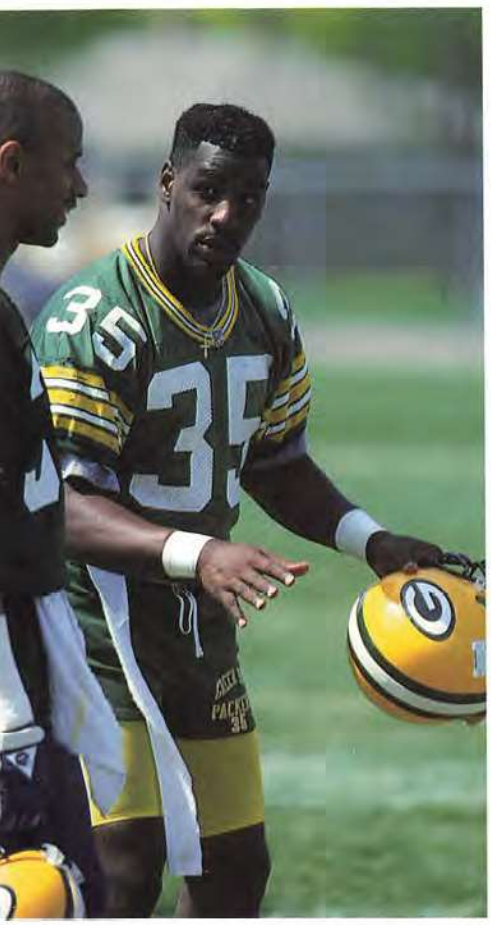
The mountainous Viaene, a 6-foot-5, 300-pound, three-year veteran, is a "home grown" product, hailing from Kaukauna, WI, located just 20 miles south of Green Bay. A versatile performer, he has played offensive guard, tackle and center over the course of his pro career.

Viaene (the name is pronounced VEE-en) sat out the 1991 regular season after suffering a knee injury the day before the Patriots were scheduled to arrive in Green Bay for their opening pre-season game (August 3).

A year earlier, he had started all four games in which he played, returning to action December 9 at Pittsburgh after spending 10 weeks on injured reserve with a knee problem.

Viaene, who joined the Patriots as a Plan B free agent in March of 1989, played in every game that season, starting four in place of injured regular Danny Villa. He originally was an eighth round choice of the Houston Oilers in 1988, the 214th player selected.

The 6-foot-1, 224-pound Brady played in all 16 games for the Steelers as a rookie in 1991. A "nickel" linebacker, he posted 11 tackles overall, 9 unassisted. A 12th round draft selection out of the University of Kentucky, Brady also posted two solo tackles on special teams.



Safety, Charles Washington
Kansas City Chiefs

Safety, Adrian White
New York Giants

Wide receiver, Sanjay Beach
San Francisco 49ers

Conover, a massive 6-foot-5 and 317 pounds, was signed to provide the Packers with more size up front. An eighth round pick of the Browns last year, he started one of his four games with Cleveland before spending the balance of the year on injured reserve. The 24-year-old Syracuse alumnus registered three tackles and one sack.

Winters, 6-3 and 285 pounds, is a six-year veteran who saw service with Cleveland and the New York Giants before joining the Chiefs. A versatile addition, he played center and both guards for Kansas City—he started six games for the Chiefs in 1990—and also is a skilled deep snapper.

The 6-foot-1, 240-pound McDonald handled all of the deep snapping responsibilities for the Rams over the past two seasons. An eight-year veteran, the 33-year-old North Hollywood, CA, native played collegiately at USC for John Robinson before spending all of his pro career to date under Robinson with the Rams.

POOKIE PAYS OFF

by Rob Schultz
The Capital Times

Vince Workman was in a hurry as a sophomore sensation at Ohio State back in 1986. He dreamed of playing in the National Football League and everyone told him it was just a matter of time before he'd reach the level of a Roger Craig or Eric Dickerson.

So when an agent named David Ludik approached him after his sophomore year with the Buckeyes and asked him to sign on the dotted line, Workman felt that was the first step toward reaching his dream.

Little did Workman know that he had just taken a big step backward. Unaware of an NCAA rule that doesn't allow underclassmen to sign with agents, Workman's mistake cost him most of his final year of eligibility at Ohio State. Projected as a possible first-round choice prior to losing his eligibility, Workman slipped to the fifth round of the 1989 draft when the Green Bay Packers selected him.

Signing with an agent appeared to be a major blow to Workman's career, but there was a silver lining to the story that has helped him, after three years of waiting, move to a potential starting job with the Packers and earn a chance to finally fulfill his dream.

That silver lining is patience.

"(Signing with that agent) was the biggest mistake I made but I learned a lot from it because it made me open my eyes up about patience," said Workman.

Even though Workman has had solid training camps and preseason games throughout his first three years in Green Bay, he had to take a back seat to Keith Woodside, who was a favorite of former coach Lindy Infante. But Workman refused to complain and accepted his role. He figured it was better than sitting in the stands and watching, which was precisely what he did at Ohio State his senior year.

"It was a frustrating, painful period, but I went to the games. It was hard to stay away. I sat with Woody Hayes' wife. She kept telling me to keep my head up," said Workman.

Workman took that advice to Green Bay and his perseverance and patience allowed him more playing time last year when he became the Packers' third-down back. All he did was prove he could find the first-down marker and the end zone like a bloodhound on a fox hunt.

Workman, on the bench but always ready, awaits another shot at the end zone.

He led the Packers in touchdowns in 1991 with 11, was second only to Sterling Sharpe in receptions with 46 for 371 yards and was third in rushing with 71 carries for 237 yards. Those are pretty good numbers for a back who was in the lineup for just one-third of the offense's plays and carried the ball more than 10 times in a game just once over a 16-game span.

New Packer coach Mike Holmgren was impressed and Workman has become a favorite to land the starting halfback position this season. And Workman is truly excited about his chances, especially now that Woodside has been waived.

"Not taking anything away from Keith because he was a good running back, but I would've liked to have played a little more and I thought I could've played a little more," Workman said. "Last season was the most I've played, but I still really didn't get a chance to get into the flow of the game because I wasn't in there very much."

Workman could be a coach's dream. After all, it has been five years since he was a workhorse running back and, at the young age of 24, he has three years of pro experience behind him. In other words, he has fresh legs and a bright mind.

"I feel so good because I haven't been beat up on or worn down from any pounding," said Workman. "I still have a lot of years to play."

Workman impressed Holmgren's staff early in spring minicamps with his pass catching ability. But he learned he had to get stronger if he hoped to share the ball-carrying and blocking burden in Holmgren's two-back running attack. Thus, he has added about 10 pounds to his 5-foot-9 frame and weighs about 210.

Packer running backs coach Gil Haskell agrees Workman's potential as a runner is untapped. "The runner has to carry the ball 10 or 12 times a game to get a feel for the game," he said. "To carry it five or six times, if there's a huge hole you'll make good yardage. But there are no huge holes in this league. You've got to get in there and make it yourself or get four or five yards on your own. But it takes a while to get the feel for the game to do that."

Workman knows that if he can come through for Holmgren and the Packers, the rest of the offense will flow right along with him. All one has to do is watch film of former San Francisco 49er Roger Craig to realize how important the halfback is in the Packers' offense. Holmgren, the former 49er offensive coordinator, is implementing his old system at San Francisco in Green Bay.

"(Roger Craig) is the only person you can compare yourself to when you think of that offense because he has had so much success in it. So when you're in an offense like this you try to picture yourself as Roger Craig," said Workman, who pointed out that Craig, who weighs 220 pounds, has a stronger, different running style. "But although he was a different back I feel I can have the same kind of success that he did."

Workman understands the dangers involved when learning a new system with a new coach. If he fails, somebody else will do his job. But too many aspects of his life have gone in the right direction lately for his luck to change now. Off the field, he takes immense pride in his two-year-old son, Vincent Workman III.

Workman admitted that his new opportunity under Holmgren has him feeling much younger again. It's not much unlike his prep days in Dublin, Ohio. He moved there from the Buffalo, NY area as a freshman to live with his great uncle after his step-father died. His mother died when he was 10. His great uncle took him to a school that allowed him to develop that untapped potential and he flourished to the point where every big-time school in the country begged him to play there. The new system allowed him to thrive.

The difference is that now his package includes patience.

"It's still exciting for me. It's still fun. I want to play more and have success. And I know if I keep working hard and the team starts winning it should all fall into place," he said. "It's just a matter of time."

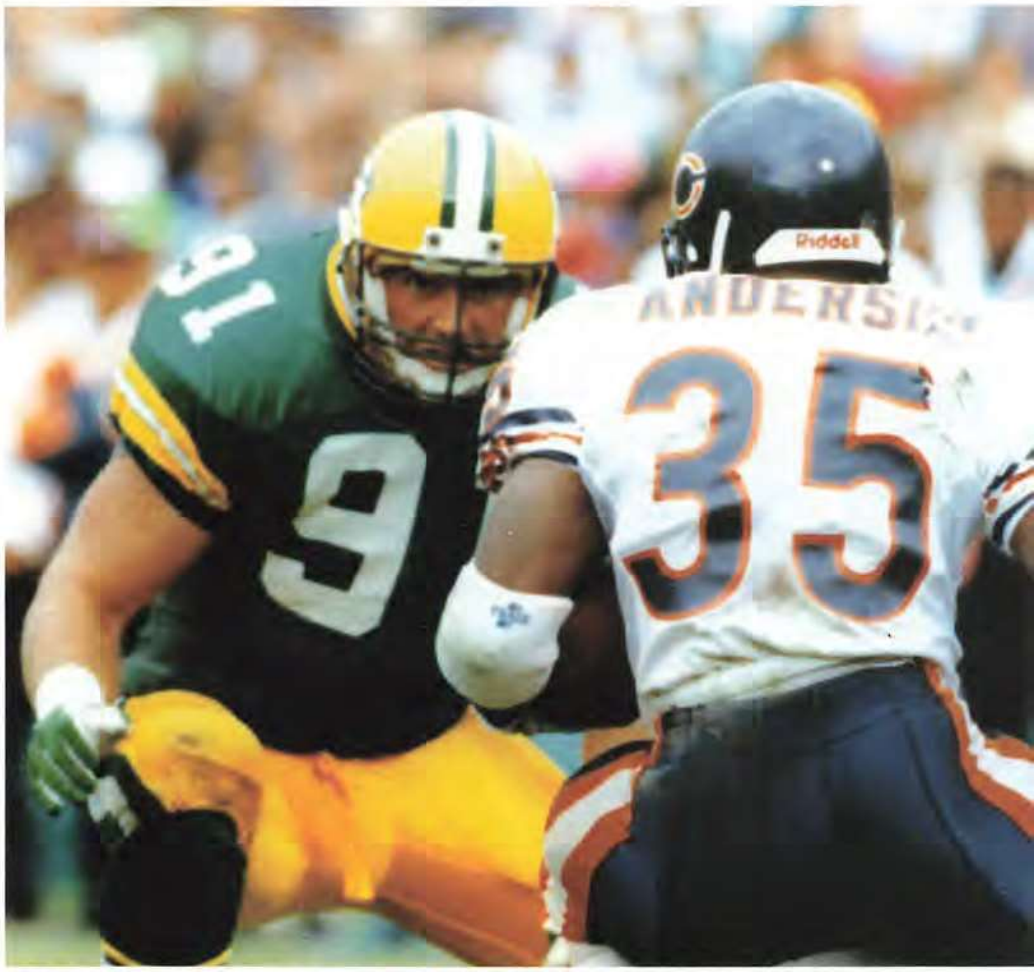
CONVERTED CALIFORNIAN NOBLE FINDS GREEN BAY A GREAT FIT



Brian Noble, who invariably rises to the spectacular heights when the Packers battle the Bears, intently zeros in on the Midway Monsters' Neal Anderson.

by Tim Froberg
Menominee Herald Leader

The slow, Southern drawl of Forrest Gregg was at the other end of the line, as Brian Noble anxiously planted the telephone to his ear midway through the fifth round of the 1985 National Football League draft.

"B-r-i-a-n, how 'ya all doin," the voice said. "This here is Forrest Gregg. How would you like to play for the Green Bay Packers?"

Noble followed the standard operating procedure of any prospective draftee and told Gregg exactly what he wanted to hear: That he would be delighted to play in Green Bay. Noble then glanced at his family and friends gathered at his parent's Anaheim home, shook his head, and silently mouthed to them the truth: "No! No! No!"

Thinking that Gregg was calling just to feel him out about playing in Packerland, Noble was shocked seconds later when Gregg replied: "Good, 'cuz we've just drafted you."

A Sun Devil at Arizona State and a sun devil at heart, Noble was obviously relieved his draft number had finally come up, but less than enchanted about spending his next several years in the National Football League's smallest, coldest city. The first person he called was his close friend, Kurt Boson, a classmate and neighbor at Arizona State and a Marshfield (WI) native.

"Kurt was always such a big Packer fan and I used to ride him all the time about the Packers' struggles," recalled Noble. "One time, he got so mad after me teasing him when the Packers fumbled the first two times they touched the ball and lost to Denver (in 1984) on Monday Night Football, that he punched a hole in my door and yelled: 'You just watch, Brian, you're going to get drafted by the Packers!' After the Packers took me, I called Kurt and said, "'You SOB.'"

A persistent, playful grin lights the face of Noble, one of the team's most insightful and reflective players, as he recollects his first emotions as a Packer. As it turned out, Green Bay and Noble couldn't have been a better fit. The team's rock-solid starting linebacker for the past seven years, Noble has been a model of productivity and durability on the field. Off the field, few Packer players have truly enjoyed the area and given back as much as Noble, the Packers' version of the American Sportsman.

An avid outdoorsman with a zest for virtually every type of hunting and fishing, Noble has been known to arrive for Packer practices, and even home games, with wild game bulging from his backpack.

"I can guarantee this: There's no other player in the league who can say they do the things I do here," Noble says. "Where else can you come walking into the locker room before practice, with a goose and stuff it in your foot locker? I'm able to bird hunt a mile from my house and I can trout fish directly across the street from my home. It's really my kind of paradise."

Noble's love of the great outdoors is understandable. His father, Dallas, has always been an outdoor enthusiast and hooked Brian on fishing and hunting at a young age. Brian, the youngest of four children raised by Dallas and Delores Noble, was born and raised in Anaheim–not exactly a hunter's paradise. Brian, however, frequently accompanied Dallas on hunting and fishing trips throughout California, New Mexico and Minnesota. Dallas currently operates a successful plating business and machine shop in Los Angeles.

"He had me hunting and fishing when I was in diapers, really," Noble notes. "He's got pictures of me on boats fishing in diapers and pulling fish out. I can remember him carrying me on his back across duckponds when I was four years old. I can remember sitting in the snow in Colorado, deer hunting with my dad. He's originally from a small town in Minnesota (Jeffers) and has been hunting and fishing all his life."

Brian became skilled with more than just a rod and reel. A defensive end and a punter, Noble was a three-year football standout at Anaheim High, averaging 42.5 years per punt his senior season. His hang time on a surfboard wasn't bad, either.

"I used to just about live at the beach," Noble said. "My buddies and I spent every summer day there. I was your typical California kid."

Noble, in fact, didn't make much of an impression on his future father-in-law when he showed up for his first date with his eventual wife, Cindy, who grew up just a few blocks from Brian in Anaheim.

"Her dad just about passed out when he saw me pull up," Noble said with a chuckle. "I had hair down to my shoulders, no shirt, no shoes. She had gone to an all-girls school, while I had gone to public school and here I was: This big surfer type. I'm not sure he felt I was the right guy for his daughter. God help me, if a guy like that pulls up some day to pick up my daughter, I don't know if I'll be real thrilled about it, either."

The two both attended ASU following two years at Fullerton (CA) junior college and married during their junior year. Currently, they have two young daughters: Amanda, 7, and Taylor, 3. The Nobles make Green Bay their year-round home, and both Brian and Cindy are heavily involved in a number of charitable causes around the community.

"An athlete can have either a positive or a negative impact," Noble says. "There's no such thing as an athlete having no impact. Anyone who sits around and is not involved, that's a negative impact. That's someone who just doesn't give a damn. I truly care about my family and the community. We've set up a home here because we didn't want our family living out of a suitcase. My kids go to school here and if I can better the community in some way by being involved, I'm honored."

Noble has been one of the Packers' finest inside linebackers–if not the finest–since Ray Nitschke. Nitschke has always liked Noble's bruising, all-out style and has shared with Noble his insights into the game and the Packers' rich tradition.

"Ray and I have somewhat of a special relationship," said Noble, who has average over 100 tackles per season. "He's talked to me about leadership and has critiqued my play. He's instilled in me what it used to be and what it should be like around here. It means a great deal that someone who has all the accolades such as Ray, would even take time to talk to me, let alone give me advice.

"I've often wondered what it would have been like playing for the Packers during the glory days and when you see guys like Ray, Bart Starr, Jerry Kramer, Max McGee and Fuzzy Thurston standing on the sidelines before our game, it really brings together the rich tradition of this franchise."

The Packers have experienced just one winning season (1989) in Noble's seven years with the team, and a steady diet of defeats has been tough for Noble to digest. Noble, who'll turn 30 in September wants to finish his NFL career with Green Bay and be a part of the long-awaited resurrection of the Packers.

"When this team finally wins, there's going to be no place like this," Noble said. "Just seeing how people reacted in '89, greeting us at the airport and everything, was really exciting. I can say without reservation that when we bring the Lombardi Trophy back here, there'll be no better place. You can win a Super Bowl any place–LA, New York, Minnesota–but it won't mean the same thing as it will here.

"I think the slogan, America's Pack, is very fitting. It's kind of like a "Rocky" story here. We've been beat down for so long and I think that everyone who's 35 and older has a little green and gold in them and wants the Packers to win because the organization is so rich in tradition."

Noble is one of only eight Packers remaining from the Gregg era and has been an iron man with the club, missing just three games due to injury in that time. The Noble health maintenance plan–working out religiously year-round at the team's facilities–has played a pivotal role in keeping him injury-free, but the chiseled 6-foot-4, 250-pound Noble admits that he has been lucky enough to avoid the potential landmines awaiting NFL players at every turn.

Noble virtually saw his NFL life pass in front of him last fall in training camp when he hit the turf in agony after injuring a knee in one of the team's indoor scrimmages. The initial diagnosis was that Noble had completely blown out the knee and suffered a career-threatening injury. Further diagnosis, however, revealed that Noble had only stretched the medial collateral ligament. He was back in action a few weeks later.

RING THE BELL on Archive.org

"That scared me half to death," Noble said. "I was probably in the best shape I'd ever been in, and it just brought to light how quickly it can end in this league. I train as hard as anybody and stretch a great deal. A lot of staying healthy has to do with athleticism and flexibility. But there's a great deal of luck involved. You can be in great shape, but in the wrong place at the wrong time."

When he does put his shoulder pads to rest, Noble may have a future in communications. Intelligent, insightful and personable, Noble is comfortable in front of a camera and has already dabbled in television and radio work. Last year, he and Green Bay sports personality, John Maino, teamed up to host a syndicated television show "Hitting the Outdoors."

"If an opportunity in broadcasting came up, I'd be interested," said Noble, a business communications major at ASU. "I figure I've only got a couple more years left in this game and I'd like to go out the way John Anderson did: Voluntary, without someone telling me I'm through here.

"I already have some options open to me. Initially, I want to take some time off. Spend some time with my family, and maybe go to Alaska and do some real serious hunting. I'll be financially set when I finish playing, but anyone who's naive enough to think they can sit around and enjoy themselves the rest of their lives, well, they're going to be in for a very boring life."

Some day, there may be a place for Noble in the Packer Hall of Fame. Well, technically there is. His cardboard cutout is one of a select few of active Packer players decorating the famous football gallery.

"To have a piece of yourself in that facility with the Bart Starrs and Vince Lombardis is quite an honor," Noble says. "It doesn't mean I'm in the same category as them, but for there to actually be a Brian Noble there, well, I feel very fortunate."

Big on Bruins—when not tracking down Chicago type Bears, Brian finds satisfaction in bagging the four-footed kind, like the 365 lb. black bear he felled during a 15-day Alaskan hunt in 1987.

A Fishing Family: Brian, an ardent angler, long since has introduced his wife Cindy and daughters Amanda Marie, 6, and Taylor Christine, 3, to one of his favorite pastimes, as evidenced by this family outing.

Bracing Injuries

James H. Taillon, C.O.

Ever since Joe Namath wore a Lenox Hill™ knee brace as he led the Jets to a Super Bowl victory, there has been an interest in what braces can do for athletes.

Properly designed braces allow you to continue playing (or working) under circumstances that kept you on the sidelines.

The choice of type of brace is not an easy one. The first person to consult is your physician. If a brace will be medically helpful, an orthotist will design and apply an orthosis (brace) that provides the stability and protection needed for you to function.

Braces can be designed for almost any activity. The most common braces used by athletes are knee braces, ankle braces and foot braces (arch supports). This reflects the high incidence of injuries to these areas. In basketball and hockey it is common to design protection for the face, in particular the eyes and nose.

All sports and many jobs can produce back and neck injuries. These must be treated by your doctor first! If bracing is indicated, there are a wide variety of options available that will allow you to keep on 'playing.' Even chronic back pain can be treated successfully.

For information about how braces can help, contact your physician or call The Brace Centers, Ltd.

TWO-FOR-TWO IN '62

THE BEST PACKER TEAM EVER?

by Art Daley
Editor Emeritus

The best years in Packer history? The 1962 team, without a doubt, ranks No. 1. This was Vince Lombardi's fourth creation and it posted an overall 20-1 record, topped by a brutal 16-7 NFL championship victory over the Giants in New York.

The "two" years, right from the 1920s, never forged a loser. Plus, the 1962 campaign was the first of three straight decade-length postseason appearances.

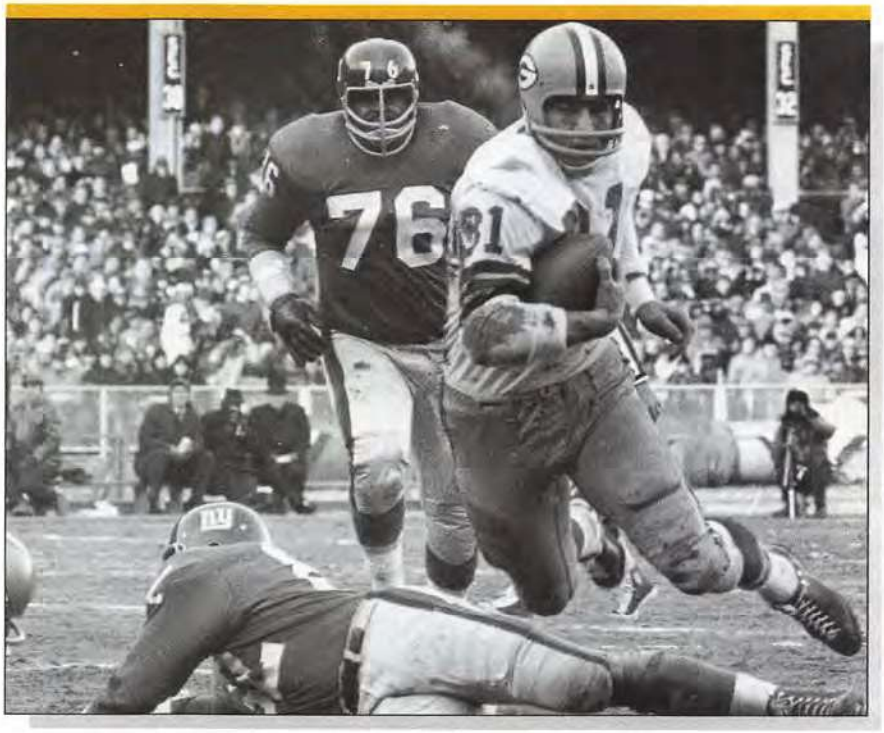
The 1972 Packers under Dan Devine won the Central Division with a 10-4 record but lost to the Washington Redskins in the playoffs 17-6. The strike-torn 1982 season saw the Pack gain the Super Bowl tournament and beat the St. Louis Cardinals 41-16 before losing to the Dallas Cowboys 37-26.

The Packers played seven "two" years and besides the .846 ratio of 1962 they came up with 10-3-1 for .750 in 1932 and 8-2-1, .772 in 1942. In all, the Pack won 56 games in the "two" years,lost only 22 and tied six for .701.

And now it's 1992 and Mike Holmgren becomes the first Packer head coach to start a "two" year. Needless to say, what happened in the Packers' "numerical" history is of little help in Holmgren's quest for victories.

However, it is an interesting fact in Packer lore that the last three 10-year spans brought forth post-season play.

Most significant, of course, is this 30th anniversary of the Pack's 1962 championship. A few years later, this team was quickly recognized as the Packers' greatest, although the old-timers back then pointed to the 1929 Packer team that finished 12-0-1 as the best.



An intense Jim Taylor leaps over a fallen Giant during the Packers' 16-7 victory in the 1962 National Football League championship game at New York's Yankee Stadium. Taylor set a Packer record for rushing attempts (31), a mark which still stands, in emerging as the game's leading rusher with 85 yards.

The '62 team scored 415 points and allowed only 148 for an average score of 29.6 to 10.5. They rolled up 4,791 yards, 2,460 by rushing and 2,331 passing (a 51.3 to 48.6 rush-pass ratio). They also set 22 Packer records and three NFL team marks.

Plus, Bart Starr won the NFL passing championship; Jim Taylor won the league rushing (1,474 yards) and scoring (114 points on 19 touchdowns) crowns; and Willie Wood won the NFL interception title with nine.

The 1962 season was perilous from the standpoint that the Packers were trying to repeat as champion. They won it in 1961 by posting an 11-3 record and demolishing the New York Giants in the title game, 37-0. Thus, every opponent considered the Packer game its key game.

Two teams gave the Packers the most trouble—Baltimore Colts, led by the great Johnny Unitas, and the Detroit Lions, boasting a terrific defense led by Joe Schmidt, Alex Karras, Roger Brown and Wayne Walker.

The Packers were able to handle the Colts 17-6 and 17-13 but the Lions were another story. They were both 3-0 when the Lions came to Green Bay for Game 4. The Lions had the ball, first down and a 7-6 lead with 6:01 left in the game. They put together two first downs and reached midfield at the two-minute mark. Then on third and seven, Milt Plum aimed a pass at Terry Barr and Herb Adderley intercepted and returned 24 yards to the Lion 18 with one minute left. After two rushing plays to the 14, Paul Hornung won the game 9-7 with a 21-yard field goal, with 33 seconds left.

The Lions were furious. They vowed revenge and got it in the rematch—Game 11 on Thanksgiving Day in Detroit. The Packers were coming off a tough win over the Colts and the Lions had an easy time with the expansion Minnesota Vikings.

The Lions played 10 feet off the ground, especially their defense. Starr was sacked 10 times for 101 yards and a safety. The Pack's proud offensive line was crumbled by the Lions' furious rush and Fuzzy Thurston later said "We'd yell, 'look out Bart, here they come again.'"

The Lions scored three quick TDs following a 16-yard punt by Boyd Dowler and fumbles by Tom Moore and Bart Starr. It was 26-zip in the third quarter before the Packers started to retaliate. They scored two TDs in the fourth quarter and most observers agreed that if the game had lasted five more minutes Green Bay would have won. To this day the Lions refer to that game as one of their greatest in history.

The Packers won their last three games and then prepared for the championship game against the Giants, who finished 12-2, in New York. Like the Lions, the Giants had revenge on their minds for the drubbing they received in the '61 title game.

Despite the Pack's record, the Giants were installed as a three-point favorite for the NFL's 30th championship playoff in Yankee Stadium on Sunday, Dec. 30.

The big day turned out to be brutal. The field was frozen solid. It was around 10 above and there was a 40-mile wind blowing in off the coast. The Packers wore shoes with rippled rubber soles.

Perhaps the weather was a good omen for Green Bay because Lombardi liked power, rushing football. In fact, during the practice week in Green Bay Vince agreed with his old remark: "You do what you do best and you do it again and again." That would be Jim Taylor and Paul Hornung running the football.

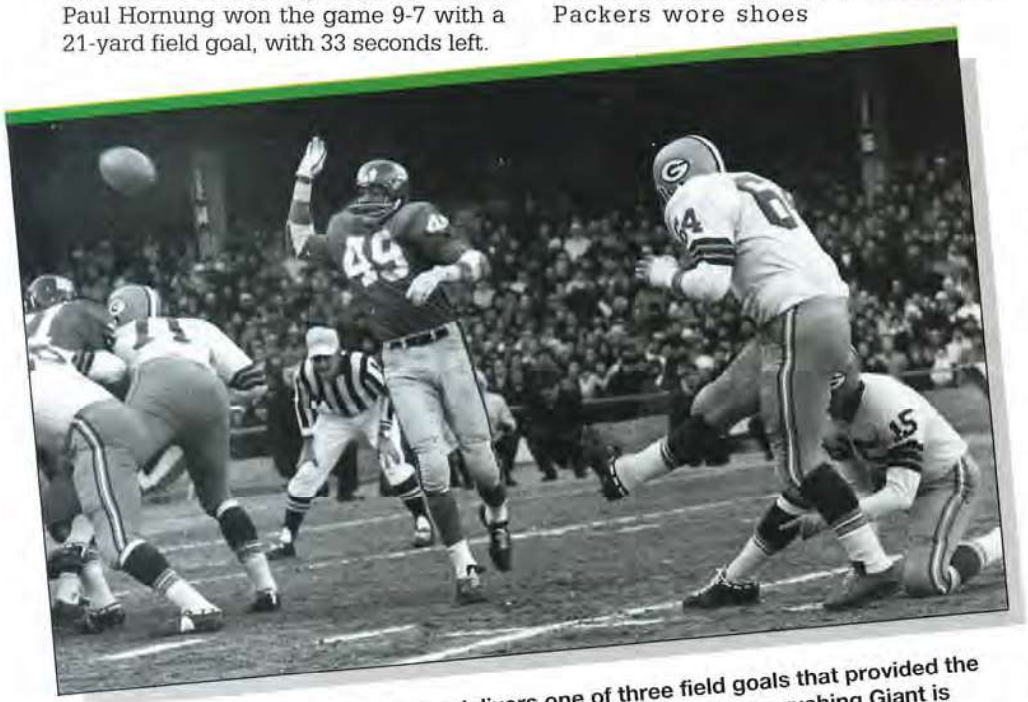
The Packers stuck to the ground with Middle linebacker Ray Nitschke, later to be chosen "Player of the Game," here puts a stop on Giants' running back Alex Webster.

46 carries, 31 for 85 yards by Taylor, while Starr threw only 22 passes. The Giants' Y.A. Tittle threw 41 times in the treacherous wind and they ran only 26. Hornung carried eight times, quite a feat since he had played little since wrecking his knee in Game 5, the week after his kick beat Detroit.

The loss of Hornung's foot made a hero out of Jerry Kramer, the big guard, who booted 9 field goals in 11 attempts during the season and 3 of 4 in the title game.

The Packers scored in every period. A 60-yard drive produced Kramer's first field goal from 26 yards. Midway in Period 2 the Pack moved 56 yards and Taylor scored standing up from seven yards out. Early in Period 3, Erich Barnes broke through and blocked a Max McGee punt, with Jim Collier recovering in the end zone for the touchdown.

New York had high hopes with the score 10-7, but four plays later Ray



Jerry Kramer delivers one of three field goals that provided the Packers' eventual margin of victory. The on-rushing Giant is Erich Barnes.

Nitschke recovered Sam Horner's fumbled punt on the Giant 42. The Packers then drove in for a 29-yard Kramer field goal. The Packers dominated the fourth quarter as Kramer missed a 40-yard field goal but clinched the game with a 30-yard shot with 2:40 left.

Lombardi wasn't particularly ecstatic after the game other than to say, "I was real satisfied with the win. We were superb on defense but we played overall better in the last three or four games." What did he say to the players? "I didn't say much. We just said a little prayer of thanksgiving," he told the press.

The Packers came home to a huge welcome at the airport and one sign in the audience told it all: "NY Can Have Tittle, GB Has The Title."

The Packers went on to greater accomplishments in the roaring 1960s, but there was only one member of that '62 team who made it to the playoff excitement under Devine a decade later. That would be Ray Nitschke, who finished his 15th and final season as a backup to Jim Carter at middle linebacker. Plus, Starr handled the offense in his one year as an assistant coach.

The '72 team was unique because it had virtually only a short passing game with sophomore Scott Hunter at quarterback. Two rookies played big parts—Willie Buchanon, a great cornerback, and Chester Marcol, who booted a record 33 field goals. The Pack won it with a staunch rushing game behind John Brockington (1,027 yards) and "blocker" MacArthur Lane (821 yards).

An inscrutable Vince Lombardi, snug in a stormcoat on a day which saw the wind chill plunge to a minus-47 degrees, shows no emotion while surveying the on-field action. Defensive coordinator Phil Bengtson is second from left.

George Allen of the Redskins exposed the Pack's weakness with the pass by stopping Brockington and Lane in the playoff at Washington.

Starr, who succeeded Devine in 1975 at the Packer helm, was in his eighth and penultimate season when the "two" year rolled around.

The strike turned the 1982 season into a nightmare. The Packers opened with two wins, topped by a Monday nighter in New York, a come-from-behind 27-19 victory over the Giants. The 57-day, eight-game strike started the next day. Fortunately, Starr was able to keep most of the players in Green Bay and when play resumed the Bays were sharp, finishing with a 5-3-1 record.

Thus, the Packers qualified for the post-season Super Bowl Tournament. They drew the St. Louis Cardinals and the first game was played Jan.8 in Green Bay on a balmy, 28-degree afternoon. Quarterback Lynn Dickey threw four touchdown passes, two to John Jefferson and one each to James Lofton and Eddie Lee Ivery, in the lopsided win. Tournament Game 2 was in Dallas and the Cowboys took advantage of three interceptions of Dickey passes and two fumble recoveries to knock the Packers out.

In the nine seasons since that post-season party, the Packers fired three coaches, Starr, Forrest Gregg and Lindy Infante, and posted a combined record of 57-85-1 for an unimpressive .402.

To be sure, Coach Holmgren now has his work cut out but he can't really depend on a "two" year...or maybe?

HARRIS & WEST: MUTUAL RESPECT

by Tom Silverstein
The Milwaukee Sentinel

Like a young son irritated by his father's unreasonable expectations, Jackie Harris scoffs at a reminder that fellow tight end Ed West has predicted he will become the next Ozzie Newsome.

"He needs to quit that," Harris said. "You get hung with something like that and people expect things to happen. The things we did last year just didn't allow me to be that type of player. Hopefully, this year it will work out."

In case anyone thinks that Harris' remarks indicate a rift between the Green Bay Packers' two tight ends, they should know that West and Harris maintain a special relationship that transcends that of average teammates.

Nowhere in all of the Fox Valley is there a bigger fan of Jackie Harris than right inside the Packer locker room three stalls to the left of the players' entrance. That's where the venerable West makes his home during the season and often answers questions about Harris' future.

When West speaks of his fellow tight end it is not so much with reverence as it is with parental pride, alternating praise for Harris' ability with warnings that nothing will come easy.

"You look at Jackie, he's developing," West said. "He can have a full game. It's up to him.

"He's got all the tools. We all know that. When you're close to someone, you can feel them out and know what they're thinking and Jackie's definitely shooting for that level. He's going for it right now. I think this will definitely be his year."

While there is a 6 1/2-year age difference between West and Harris—virtually a full generation in the football world—there are no restrictions on who can be the teacher and who can be the pupil.

West, who ranks behind only Ron Hallstrom and Robert Brown as the longest running member of the Packers with nine years under his belt in Green Bay, has learned as much from Harris as the young tight end has learned from him.

Ed West is best known for his considerable blocking skills but he is also a capable receiver. He enters the 1992 season as the 18th ranking receiver in Packer history.

Both men have benefited from the other because their abilities are so different. West is thick and compact and blocks so well that former tight end coach Virgil Knight used to call him "Velcro." Harris is tall, fast and quick off the line and, minus a few pounds, could pass as a wide receiver.

At no time was the difference between the two more evident than in their first practice together in 1990 when Harris was a rookie trying to make the team. When West saw Harris line up to get in a blocking position, he couldn't believe his eyes.

"When he first come here and I saw his stance as a blocker, I just shook my head and thought 'You've got an ugly stance,'" West said. "I pulled him over to the side and I said 'Jackie, wait a minute.'

"He was coming in from that passing offense where he was a receiver. Watching him block, I said, 'There isn't anyway you're going to get the job done.'

"But when I first saw him run a route I said, 'Oh, oh, I'm in trouble'."

Despite competing for playing time, the two have never quit being each other's strongest supporters. When Harris was drafted in the fourth round to become the deep threat the Packers never had, West never took it personally.

And Harris, who has experienced growing pressure to become a player the caliber of the Hall-of-Fame-bound Newsome, has always respected West and never strolled around the practice field as though he were anointed.

"Even though we play the same spot I respect him because he's the type of person I love working with," West said. "I don't like a guy who thinks he's better than everyone else. I'd rather work with somebody that respects me and I respect him.

"I've learned so much from him about being a receiver. It's been back and forth. He's learned some things from me about being a blocker. We've been working together. It's important not to be a selfish player and we definitely are both not selfish players."

The two men's relationship will be put to the test this fall because Head Coach Mike Holmgren will not employ the same amount of double tight ends Lindy Infante did last year. Though both players should receive a significant amount of playing time, Holmgren will be looking for one of the two to emerge as the "go to guy".

In that respect, Harris, the younger, more explosive of the two will be the one everybody will be looking at this season. In two seasons he has caught 36 passes for 421 yards and three touchdowns, which are decent numbers but by no means spectacular.

What has everyone excited about Harris are the catches of 35, 32, 26, 21 and 19 yards interspersed among his three dozen receptions. Those are the kind of plays officials in the Packers organization think he can make at least once every game.

"I think because of the athletic ability he has everyone has high expectations," General Manager Ron Wolf said. "He can add a real change-up to the offense.

"What you've had before is the smack-backer tight end who runs right into the linebacker, bounces off and tries to separate himself. Now people are looking for guys with movement who can outrun people and add pressure to the secondary.

"Not a lot of people can do that. Jackie has that potential. It's up to him to realize what he possesses. He's certainly tough enough; he has speed and size. He has all the intangibles. Right now he's just learning the system."

Harris acknowledges that there are tremendous expectations for him to succeed.

"I have a lot of expectations of myself," Harris said. "There are things I want to do. I'm tired of hearing of all this potential. 'He's got potential to do this and that.'

"The longer you have that tag, pretty soon you're 30 years old. The potential's gone and you never got a chance. Hopefully, it won't be that way. I'm looking at this year as a pivotal point in my career."

Of course, just because the coaching staff is expecting big things from Harris doesn't mean West will be swept to the side. He has shaken off competitor after competitor ever since joining the Packers as a free agent out of Auburn in 1984.

West's meal ticket has been his blocking, although he ranks 18th on the Packers' all-time receiving list with 142 catches. His 23 career receiving touchdowns means he scores about every six times he catches a ball.

"Anybody who blocks as well as he can and plays as hard as he does can function in any offense," Wolf said. "There's still a definite need in this game for someone who can block."

Just exactly how this year's tight end situation shakes out won't be known until September 6 when the Packers open the season up against Minnesota at Lambeau Field. The only thing that is a guarantee is that whichever one isn't in the starting lineup will be the other's strongest supporter.

Jackie Harris, adept at running with the football after making the catch, sights in on open spaces following reception against Seattle Seahawks.

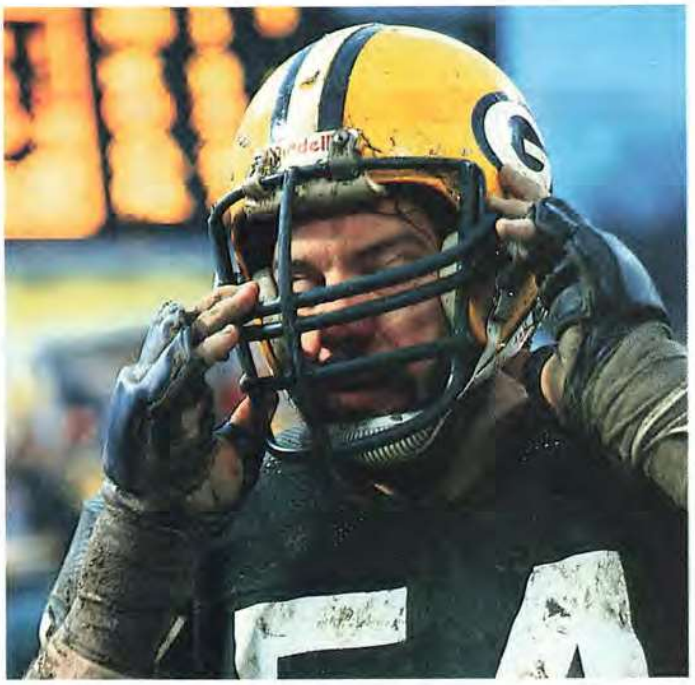
Lynn Dickey, unfurling one of the 2,831 passes he threw on behalf of the Packers, holds more club records than any other quarterback in Packer history except Bart Starr.



Larry McCarren started more games (133) than any other center in Packer history. And only one player, Forrest Gregg, was more durable, McCarren having played in 162 consecutive games before suffering a career-ending neck injury in 1984.

DICKEY, McCARREN, SCHNEIDER ENTER 'HALL'

Herber to Hutson...Hornung and Taylor...Thurston and Kramer...

Chief among the noteworthy tandems in Packer history, all long since have been enshrined in the Packer Hall of Fame.

Appropriately enough, they were joined by another prominent duo—one with an even closer professional relationship—during the Hall's 1992 induction dinner.

Quarterback Lynn Dickey, recognized as one of the premier long passers in pro football annals, and the man who snapped the ball to him with flawless consistency over nine National Football League seasons, center Larry McCarren, were jointly enshrined during ceremonies at Green Bay's Embassy Suites the night of February 8.

The late Al Schneider, who helped promote and support the Packers in an unofficial capacity for more than 20 years, was posthumously inducted with them as a contributor.

Both Dickey and McCarren, teammates for 10 seasons, expressed pleasure over being honored together. "How fitting," said the former field general. "We worked very, very closely for a lot of years."

"It's somebody you sweated with out there," said McCarren. "It's also someone I respect. I had the chance to play with (Joe) Theismann and (Joe) Montana at Pro Bowls...To me, Lynn threw the ball better than anyone. He was the most accurate long ball thrower I've ever seen. Bar none."

Dickey's career statistics lend credence to McCarren's "testimony." The former Kansas State quarterback, who came to the Packers in a 1976 trade with Houston that sent fellow quarterback John Hadl to the Oilers, holds more Packer records than any other passer in the team's history except Bart Starr, including most yards in one season (4,458 in 1983), most yards in one game (418) and most completions in one game (35 of 51) in 1980.

A Pro Bowl alternate in 1984, he completed 1,592 of 2,831 passes for 21,369 yards and 133 touchdowns before closing out his career in 1985.

Dickey, presented by his former coach, Bart Starr, today owns and operates three sports cafes in Kansas City, St. Louis and Beaver Creek, CO.

McCarren, a 12th round draft choice out of the University of Illinois in 1973, facetiously summed up his career with a single sentence in his acceptance speech.

"You drive into town with a beat-up, 1970 Volkswagen, you spend 12 years with your hands between your legs," he said, "and they put you in the Hall of Fame."

His credentials, however, are beyond reproach. The 40-year-old native of Park Forest, IL, one of the most consistent and dependable performers ever to wear Green Bay's green and gold, started more games (132) than any other center in Packer history before suffering a neck injury in Game 12 of the 1984 season that ended his playing career.

And only one player, Forrest Gregg, who holds the club record with a 187-game streak, has been more durable than Number 54, who played in 162 consecutive games to share

Al Schneider, only the sixth man in the history of the Packer "Hall" to be honored as a contributor, was posthumously saluted for his efforts in helping establish the Hall of Fame and as chairman of the Green Bay Chamber of Commerce Sports Committee, annual sponsors of the "Welcome Back Packers" dinner and other Packer-oriented functions.

runnerup honors in Packer annals with Willie Davis.

Today sports director of Green Bay television station WFRV-TV, he holds another distinction. Only five players in Packer history—Starr, Gregg, Ray Nitschke and Charles "Buckets" Goldenberg and Dave Hanner—have worn a Green Bay uniform longer than McCarren, a two-time Pro Bowl selection.

Schneider, who died in 1983, was active in support of the Packers as chairman of the Green Bay Chamber of Commerce Sports Committee, initiating a luncheon which introduced Packer rookies to the community and spearheading the staging of other civic functions in behalf of the team over two decades.

Founder of a national trucking empire, he also played a key role in launching the Packer Hall of Fame as a charter member of the Hall's board of directors.

Enshrinement of the trio brings the total number of inductees to 106, including six contributors.

Uniformed Tuaolo, possessor of an exceptional tenor voice, sings the Star Spangled Banner on national TV (TNT) prior to the Packers' October 17 meeting with the Chicago Bears in Lambeau Field.

TUAOLO IS IN TUNE

by Lee Vogels
The Milwaukee Sentinel

When singing a difficult number like the Star Spangled Banner, it's important to start at precisely the right pitch. If you start too high it won't come out right. Start too low and you'll choke.

There's a defensive lineman for the Green Bay Packers who knows how vital it is to get off on the right note — in singing as well as football.

Second-year nose tackle Esera Tuaolo is on the right scale in both endeavors. He sings. He psyches up his teammates. He sacks quarterbacks.

Not only is Tuaolo a gifted tenor who is occasionally invited to sing the National Anthem at major sporting events, but he is a gifted lineman who worked his way into the Packers' starting lineup as a rookie second-round draft choice.

A 6-foot-2, 285-pound descendant of American Samoan parents, Tuaolo started all 16 games last year and finished the season with 48 total stops, 30 of which were unassisted. He was fifth in quarterback sacks with 3 1/2.

From the start Tuaolo didn't disappoint the Packers' scouts who prior to the 1991 draft rated him the third best defensive lineman in the nation. The Pac-10 Conference's Defensive Player of the Year at Oregon State in 1989, Tuaolo made an auspicious debut against Philadelphia at Lambeau Field Sept. 1, 1991. He registered five tackles (two solos) and 1 1/2 sacks.

That first professional sack was an event he'll always remember. It came against one of the top quarterbacks in the league, Randall Cunningham, on the Eagles' first offensive series. Tuaolo threw Cunningham for a nine-yard loss back to midfield ending an early threat.

"The whole season was a highlight," Tuaolo said shortly after the Packers' second minicamp this spring. "In the beginning it was like a dream come true. When you're in high school (football) your goal is to get into college (football). And when you're in college your goal is to get to the ultimate, the NFL. That was the highlight, just being able to be where the big boys are, to be in the show."

He was indeed part of the cast, and not as a bit player. In his third game, Green Bay's first of two wins in the first half of the season, Tuaolo provided a key sack. He brought down Tampa Bay quarterback Vinny Testaverde on a key third-down late in the game. The sack enabled Green Bay to regain possession and drive for the winning field goal.

Tuaolo's play in his first year earned him a place on Football News and College and Pro Football Newsweekly All -Rookie teams.

But a new season brings new goals for Tuaolo. "The next goal is to take (performance) up another level," Tuaolo said. "Just try to improve myself...and help this team get to the Super Bowl. All-Pro? Someday. That's part of the goal."

Improving on last year's 4-12 is the most immediate goal for Tuaolo. "We're going to be good. Everything is going to come out good for us," he said.

The youthful exuberance glitters in Tuaolo's dark eyes. His zest for the game is nothing if not genuine. That's obvious when he talks about his job.

"I like being in the zone. You're in a different world," Tuaolo said. "It's a whole, totally different ball game when you're playing in the middle. It's a bigger challenge. I think that's what I like about it."

There's the pure satisfaction of getting to the quarterback. But, for Tuaolo, there's something extra special about stuffing the run.

"I love to stuff the run. My goal is let nobody in the middle. If I do that, I don't care if I don't make the tackle. If I just pile it up and he bounces outside, that's my goal.

"That's what I need to do. That's my job — to protect that middle. That's my area in there, from A gap to A Sap. Nobody, nobody should go through there."

Seldom in his rookie season was that job more difficult than against Chicago Bears' center Jay Hilgenberg, said Tuaolo. "I think he was probably the toughest I played against. He was real quick, quick off the ball, with good technique."

New York Jets' center Jim Sweeney was another difficult challenge for Tuaolo. "He was big and also he was quick."

"To me, they're all good players. Every player that I play against ... I show them the respect that they deserve. But when time comes for the battle, I'm going to win the war. I need to win the war."

That need to win on the gridiron fully manifested itself when he moved from his family's 15-acre banana farm on Oahu to California. Leaving behind the farming responsibilities opened up more time to pursue studies and football.

"I could concentrate on school and also concentrate on football. That's when I really started playing football," said Tuaolo, who moved to the mainland to live with his uncle.

He recalled the awe of seeing hundreds of players out for the Don Lugo High School team in Chino. "That environment was football."

He played on both sides of the ball as fullback and linebacker, twice was named All-Baseline League and once Defensive Player of the Year.

The youngest of five brothers and three sisters, Tuaolo was recruited by Oregon State University to play inside linebacker. His weight was up in his freshman year so he was moved to defensive end. In his junior year he moved to nose tackle.

In a record-setting senior year he made 23 tackles behind the line of scrimmage and pressured quarterbacks 27.5 times. Both marks are OSU records."

"At first, when they moved me (to nose tackle), I hated it," Tuaolo recalled. But Coach Brady Hoke introduced him to the angled stance known as the "tilt." It was a stance used effectively and most notably by New York Jets' nose tackle Joe Klecko.

In his first game using the new technique, the 1989 season-opener against Stanford, Tuaolo earned Pac-10 Player of the Week honors with a performance that included five solo tackles (two in Standford's backfield) and two sacks for minus 15 yards.

Esera Tuaolo, putting pressure on the heart of the Cowboys' offensive line, made an immediate impact as a rookie in 1991, winning the nod at nose tackle and starting all 16 games.

"I was just killing people. Because they didn't know how to block (the tilt). Nobody in the Pac-10 tilted their nose tackles. The guard was so confused, he didn't know whether to get me or go out to the linebacker."

Nose tackle got to be a lot more fun from then on, Tuaolo said. "Ever since then it's like I'm in a different world. I just loved it from that day on."

His zest for the role prompted this from an opponent: "He will be one of the finer nose guards in the league someday," Buffalo all-pro center Kent Hull said after the Packers-Bills game last season.

With the confidence gained from a successful rookie year and changes in the defense brought in by a new coaching staff, Tuaolo anticipates the 1992 season will be even better.

He'll enjoy another advantage, defensive line coach Greg Blache. "When I came back for the first minicamp and I found out that they kept him, it was awesome," Tuaolo said. "He's a good coach. He's taught me a lot. Not only about football but also how to (handle things) off the field.

"If there's any coach who is going to coach me to become the best that I can be I'd say it's going to be him. And I'm not trying to get no brownie points, you know. I'm just saying he's an awesome coach."

Tuaolo feels no trace of a kneecap injury that slowed him somewhat last season. Neither are there any lingering effects of a weight-room accident in which he suffered a bruised sternum when he dropped a bar of free weights on his chest.

"The off-season did a lot of wonders for my legs, for my whole body," he said.

To soothe his soul, Tuaolo applies music in the form of a rich high tenor voice. His crystalline version of the National Anthem brought a standing ovation from a packed Lambeau Field before the Bears game last year. What started as locker room shower serenading has bloomed into a promising sideline. On the urging of one of his college trainers, Tuaolo sang the National Anthem before an Oregon State basketball game.

"That is the most difficult song to sing because there's so many parts to it. If you start too low you won't get through. If you start too high you'll never make it. You have to start just right and with the pressure (of the crowd). . .

You might say, too, that it's important to get off on the right note in building a successful career in football. In that endeavor as well, Esera Tuaolo seems right on key.

LINDY LEAVES WITH CLASS

Lindy Infante, the tenth head coach in Packer history, left Green Bay as he had come—with dignity and class.

And, though he will not be remembered as a winner from the standpoint of record, he will have one enduring satisfaction: Knowing that he brought the Packer faithful one of the most memorable seasons in the team's long and distinguished history.

In 1989, his second year as Green Bay's head coach, Infante led the Packers to a 10-6 record—the team's best in 17 years and one punctuated by four one-point victories, a National Football League single season record.

Along the way, the Packers five times came from behind to win with garrison finishes, leaving their fans in a state of euphoria as the Green and Gold went down to the final day of the season before being eliminated from the playoffs.

Infante subsequently became the consensus choice of the nation's sports media as NFL "Coach of the Year" following that improbable '89 season—the first Packer coach to be accorded the honor since Vince Lombardi in 1959.

Inevitably, expectations were extremely high in 1990, more than a few loyalists anticipating a playoff berth and some even entertaining visions of a Super Bowl appearance.

But it was not to be, the Packers falling to 6-and-10 that season, then to 4-and-12 in an ill-starred '91 campaign marred by a host of on-field misadventures—chief among them inopportune fumbles and costly interceptions.

The infelicitous combination brought Infante's four-year tenure to an end last December 22—the day after the '91 season ended—when Ron Wolf, the Packers' new executive vice president, announced he was making a coaching change.

It had to be a painful moment for Infante, who had said upon becoming Packer head coach in 1988 that it would be his last coaching job, with the clear implication that he expected to end his career in Green Bay.

Despite his disappointment, Infante characteristically made no excuses on that last day, and pointed no fingers. To the contrary, he thanked the Packer Corporation for giving him the opportunity to be a head coach in the National Football League.

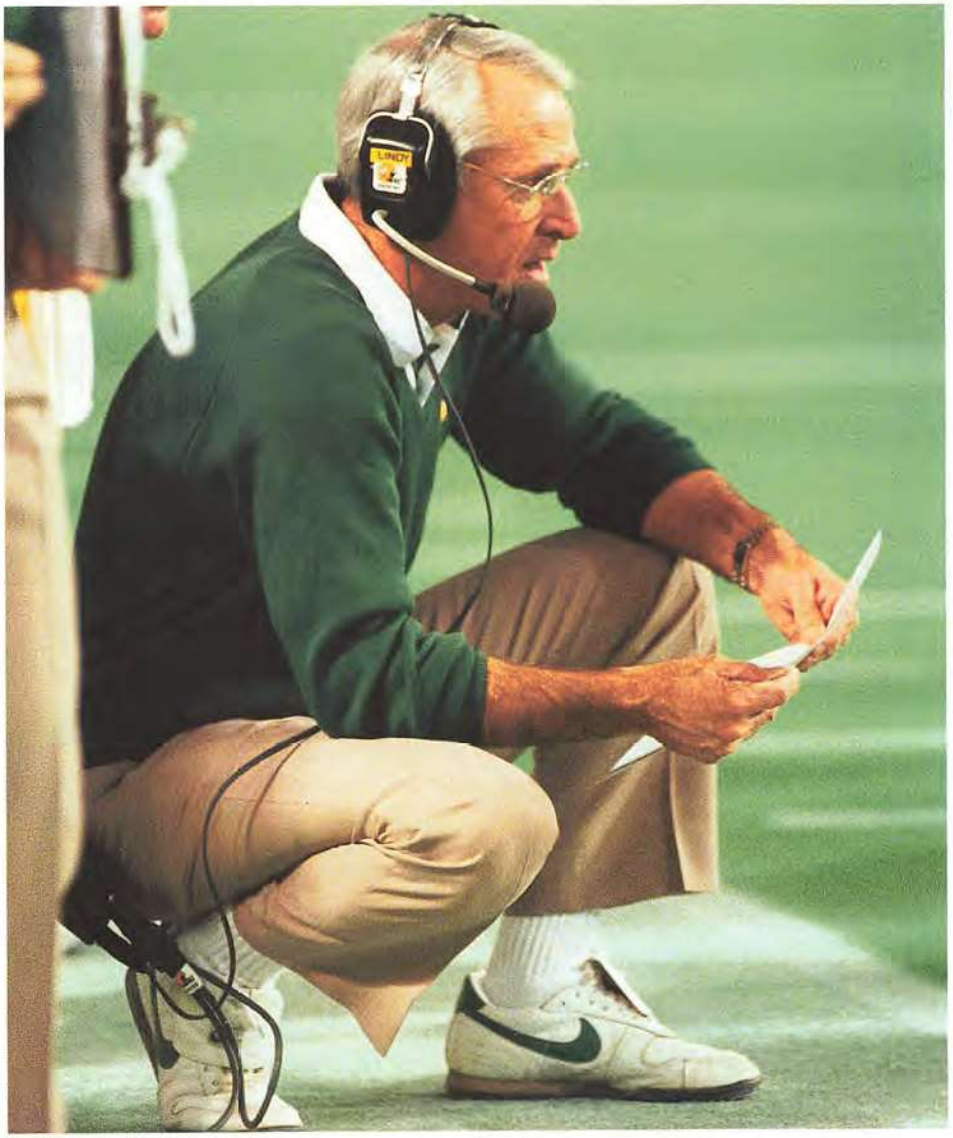
It was a graceful exit—the kind that might have been expected of one who had given much of himself to the community and the state. His Lindy Infante Invitational Golf Tournament, for example, raised more than $75,000 for the Packer 65 Roses Club to help continue the search for a cure for cystic fibrosis, and the annual "Lindy Roast" produced thousands of dollars more for the Special Olympics.

His wife, Stephanie, was equally generous with her time and talents, serving as a spokesperson for the Children's Hospital of Wisconsin and for Our Lady of Charity Center, a refuge for individuals with drug and alcohol problems, as well as a member of the Packer 65 Roses board of directors.

Seldom if ever, in fact, did a call for help with any worthy cause go unheeded by the Infantes, both blessed with a highly developed social conscience.

Admittedly, Lindy's stark won-lost record as a coach reads 24-and-40. Off the field, however, he was a consistent winner. His warmth and accessibility to the fans who daily approached him for an autograph or to pose for a "personal" photo as he left the practice field, and his caring for the handicapped—he never was too busy to stop and visit with a wheelchair-bound fan—will not soon be forgotten by those who experienced it.

To put it another way, the won-lost record may be the customary "bottom line" for a coach, but it is not the only measure of his success. As a "people" person—and a caring individual—Lindy Infante was, and is, a Hall of Famer.



Lindy Infante is shown in a familiar sideline pose with his lengthy "ready list" of offensive plays.

LEAVE IT TO BIEVER

HE'S BEEN GETTING THE PICTURE FOR 50 YEARS

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was in the midst of his third term in the White House and the United States was soon to enter World War II when Vernon Biever, his trusty Speed Graphic in hand, snapped his first photo at a Green Bay Packer game.

The year was 1941, the site was old City Stadium on Green Bay's East Side and Biever, a native of Port Washington, Wisconsin, was a student at St. Norbert College. He didn't know it then but a budding avocation was to become a lifelong passion—one which would bring him national recognition and a host of professional honors.

For the record, his memorable debut day had only one flaw—"his" Packers lost to the then awesome Chicago Bears, en route to a second straight National Football League championship, 25-17.

Since that distant afternoon, Biever has taken an estimated 150,000 photos, a substantial number of which have appeared in literally hundreds of books, magazines and newspapers across the land, enhancing the Packers' image and identity throughout the nation and the world.

Today a semi-retired Port Washington businessman but still highly involved photographer, he was honored for his many photographic contributions to Packer annals the night of February 8, 1992. On that occasion, he was presented with a plaque—saluting him for his half century of service to the Packer organization—at the Packer Hall of Fame Dinner in Green Bay's Regency Convention Center. Presented by Eugene Sladky, a member of the Packer board of directors and president of the Packer Hall of Fame, the plaque reads: "Presented to Vernon J. Biever by the Green Bay Packers in recognition of his 50 years of service as the team's sideline photographer...(Signed) Bob Harlan, President and CEO."

During this half-century span, Biever has photographed every head coach in Packer history, dating back to team founder E. L. "Curly" Lambeau and including new Head Coach Mike Holmgren, and recorded the on-field actions and exploits of literally hundreds of Packer players.

As might be expected, he has acquired an impressive list of honors and credits in the interim. He is, for prime example, one of only six photographers who have covered all 26 Super Bowls to date, an elite group which includes his son, John, a Vernon protege and today regarded as the premier football photographer for Sports Illustrated. Another son, James, also is a highly respected football photographer whose work regularly appears in Packer official publications, among others.

Vernon also gained national attention at Super Bowl XXV in Tampa a year ago with his "First Super Bowl" exhibit—consisting of his photos taken while the Packers were defeating Kansas City in Super Bowl I at Los Angeles. He also was chosen "NFL Photographer of the Year" in 1984's Pro Football Hall of Fame contest, and three other times has won national "Photo of the Year" awards in the Pro Football Hall of Fame's annual competition. ©

Vernon Biever, with hat and camera (a now obsolete Speed Graphic), is captured in action at a Packer game in Green Bay's old City Stadium, circa 1950.

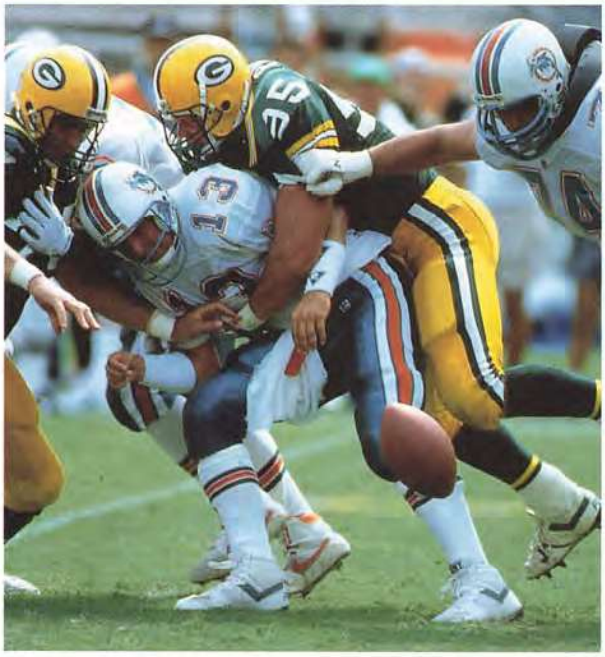
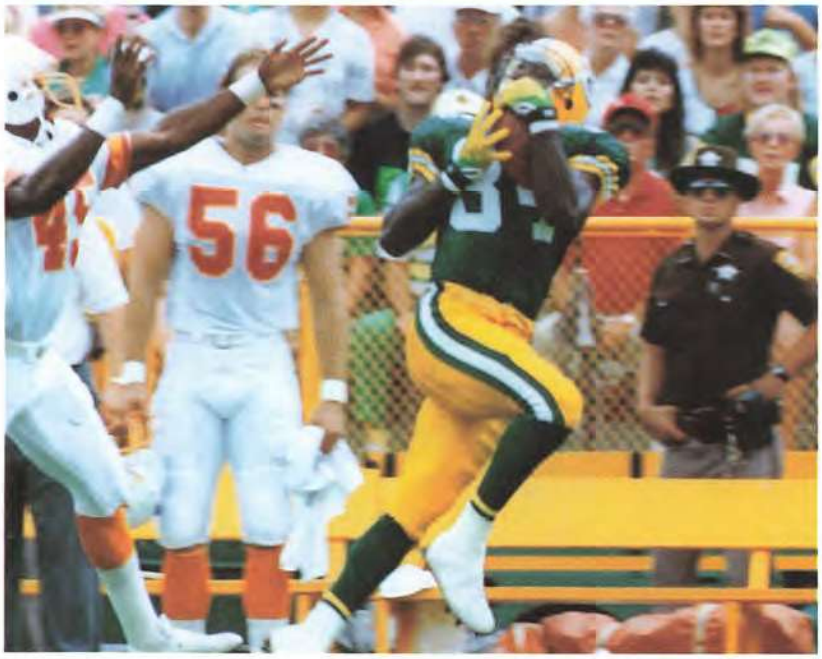
1991 SEASON



A resounding hit by Bryce Paup forces a fumble by Miami quarterback Dan Marino. Paup share 1991 team honors in forcing fumbles with Tony Bennett, each being credited with three.



Sterling Sharpe, the Packers' leading receiver for the fourth straight year, is about to pull in one of his 69 catches against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in Lambeau field September 15.

LION 'LUCK' GIVES PACKERS, BUCS HOPE

The Detroit Lions may unwittingly have done the Packers—not to mention the Tampa Bay Buccaneers— a favor of sorts by winning the National Football Conference's Central Division championship in 1991.

Not that the Packers and/or Buccaneers would not have been happy to claim that honor themselves.

But, at least, by so doing, the Lions gave them hope they could aspire to doing the same. The Lions, after all, had not won a division title since 1983 before rebounding smartly from a 45-0 defeat in last season's opener to forge a 12-4 record and gain the National Football League playoffs.

In contrast, Mike Ditka's highly competitive Chicago Bears have claimed division honors annually since 1984, except for 1989, when Minnesota interrupted their domination.

Needless to say, both the Packers and Bucs are overdue. The Green and Gold's last playoff berth was acquired during the strike-shortened 1982 season, when they posted a 5-3-1 record and went on to smother the then St. Louis Cardinals in their opening Super Bowl Tournament appearance, 41-16, before running afoul of the Dallas Cowboys in their second assignment.

It has been even longer for the Buccaneers, who most recently qualified for the playoffs in 1981.

In the Packers' case, the challenge to duplicate the Lions' success falls to new Head Coach Mike Holmgren, a man who has been accustomed to consistent success as a member of the San Francisco 49ers' staff the past six years.

At Tampa, the responsibility rests with the Buccaneers' new head man, former Cincinnati Bengals coach Sam Wyche.

And Holmgren, for one, has no illusions about the dimensions of the task at hand.

"It's a very, very solid, tough division," he said, "and, really, we're at the bottom clawing our way to the top. Right now, I'm not sure where our talent level stacks up with the rest of those clubs, but it gives us something to shoot for, because we haven't won the division in a long time."

In The Game Against Cystic Fibrosis, Winning IS Everything
Cystic Fibrosis kills children. It deprives them of their hopes... their dreams...their future. It takes them out of the game before they have a chance to play.
But for many, the game isn't over...and there's still a chance. You are a key player...and it's time for you to go in and make a contribution. Time for you to run up the score against Cystic Fibrosis.
Join the Green Bay Packer's 65 Roses Club now. TODAY. Because we can still win. And because it means so much.

VIKINGS HELP PACKERS OPEN, CLOSE

The Packers have been in business for 73 years—longer than any other National Football League standard bearers except the Chicago Bears and Phoenix Cardinals—but rarely have they found themselves opening and closing a season against the same opponent.

In fact, it has happened only twice since Green Bay entered the NFL in 1921, when the fledgling league numbered 21 clubs, among them such colorful entries as the Canton Bulldogs, Evansville Crimson Giants and Columbus Panhandles, all long since defunct.

The third time may or may not be the charm but this unusual scenario will be repeated in the 1992 season, when the Packers launch and close their regular season schedule against their neighbors to the west, the Minnesota Vikings.

They initiate their '92 agenda against the Vikings in Green Bay's Lambeau Field Sunday afternoon, September 6, and wrap up their schedule against them in the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome at Minneapolis Sunday afternoon, December 27.

The Vikings' opening day visit, incidentally, will mark the first time the Packers have kicked off a season against their Central Division rivals since 1974, when Minnesota provided the opposition as Dan Devine launched his final year as Green Bay's head coach.

It also will be the first time in 22 years that the Packers will have opened and closed a season against the same opponent. The last such happening occurred in 1970—also against an NFC Central Division foe—when they faced the Detroit Lions at "Lambeau" in their inaugural and closed the campaign against the Lions at Detroit's venerable Tiger Stadium.

Packer loyalists, it might be added, found both contests eminently forgettable. The Lions triumphed, 40-0, in the opener and 20-0 in their mutual season finale, the latter result marring Phil Bengtson's last game as Green Bay's head coach.

It had been more than three decades—34 years, to be exact—since the first time the Packers had debuted and finished against the same opponent. That was in 1936—a year which saw them capture a fourth NFL championship—when they opened and closed against the then Chicago Cardinals.

Barry Sanders, the Lions' All-Pro running back, will provide the Packer defense with home-and-home challenges during the 1992 season.

The Packers actually played the Cardinals three times that '36 season, winning the opener in Green Bay, 10-7, then blanking them at Milwaukee's Borchert Field two weeks later, 24-0, before battling the Big Red to a scoreless tie at Chicago's Comiskey Park in their season finale.

Another '92 schedule highlight will find three of the NFL's new head coaches making appearances on the Packers' home card. The first such "debut" will occur in the season opener, when Dennis Green will make his NFL head coaching bow in leading the Vikings against Green Bay—and Mike Holmgren, who himself will be debuting as a head coach.

Cincinnati's David Shula, the NFL's youngest head coach and son of future Hall of Famer Don Shula, will be the second newcomer to show. The successor to Sam Wyche, he leads the Bengals into "Lambeau" Sunday afternoon, September 20.

Pittsburgh's new field leader, Bill Cowher, will follow him one week later—Sunday afternoon, September 27—when the Steelers invade Green Bay for a 3 o'clock, NBC-TV doubleheader contest.

Inevitably, the highlight of Green Bay's home season will occur Sunday afternoon, October 25, when Mike Ditka and the Chicago Bears rumble into Titletown for the 143rd regular season meeting between professional football's most storied rivals.

The Los Angeles Rams—frequent Wisconsin visitors of late—will help the Packers close out their "Lambeau" schedule Sunday afternoon, December 20. It will be the Rams' third Green Bay visit in the last five years, having been the Packers' opening day opponent in both 1988 and 1990.

In Milwaukee, the Packers will make three County Stadium appearances in a four-week span, hosting Randall Cunningham and the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday afternoon, November 15, the Sam Wyche-Tampa Bay Buccaneers Sunday afternoon, November 29, and Barry Sanders and the Detroit Lions Sunday afternoon, December 6.

The Packers' road schedule will be spiced by a prime time appearance on national television—against the Oilers at Houston (ESPN) Sunday night, December 13, a contest which will find the Green and Gold invading Houston for the first time since 1983.

Elsewhere, they will be facing the New York Giants for the first time since 1987, visiting Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, NJ, Sunday afternoon, November 8.

Their other away assignments will take Holmgren and the Packers to Tampa Sunday, September 13, Atlanta Sunday, October 4, to Cleveland Sunday, October 18, Detroit Sunday, November 1, and Chicago for a Soldier Field rematch Sunday, November 22.

Pabst
Blue Ribbon
BEER
This is the ORIGINAL Pabst Blue Ribbon Beer. Nature's choicest products provide its prized flavor. Only the finest of hops and grains are used. Selected as America's Best in 1933.
GOVERNMENT WARNING: (1) ACCORDING TO THE SURGEON GENERAL, WOMEN SHOULD NOT DRINK ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES DURING PREGNANCY BECAUSE OF THE RISK OF BIRTH DEFECTS. (2) CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IMPAIRS YOUR ABILITY TO DRIVE A CAR OR OPERATE MACHINERY, AND MAY CAUSE HEALTH PROBLEMS.

Look to the Pabst Brewing Company. We not only brew award-winning Pabst Blue Ribbon, but Hamm's, Olympia and Olde English 800 Malt Liquor. Each has its own distinctive taste. All have Pabst quality. So stop looking. And start drinking a brew from the Pabst Family.
